PROMISES JAIL FOR MAGNATES

BRETTON WOODS, N. H., Sept. 23.—Attorney-General Wickersham, in the course of an interview to-day in which he emphatically denied he was to leave the Taft cabinet because of differences with Secretary of the Treasury MacVeagh, or because of influences brought to bear by powerful corporations, declared there are 100 trusts, in addition to those against which his department has begun suits that offer prima facie evidence of being combinations of once competing concerns. He added that he intended that some of the rich offenders should go to jail.

"The only way the great corporations can avoid prosecution is by strictly complying with the law and they are free to. They do not see that," the Attorney-General affirmed.

"I am enforcing the law as conservatively as is consistent with my duty, because it is to the interest of the country to bring about a readjustment of business conditions in conformity to the supreme court's interpretation of the Sherman anti-trust law with as little disturbance to lawful business and legitimate enterprise as possible.

Shoe Machinery Cases.

"As to my being forced out of the Cabinet by threats of powerful corporations or trust magnates, I should like nothing better than to go to the country on such an issue.

"I knew when I accepted the position in the Cabinet with which President Taft honored me just exactly what antagonisms I should incur if I enforced the law against the trusts and other powerful financial corporations.

"I do not ask anybody to agree with me, but I do ask credit for having honestly done my best to enforce the law without fear or favor. I am entitled to an honest endeavor to do my duty toward the people.

"There is the United Shoe Machinery Trust, the heads of which have been criminally indicted. The case shows clear restraint of trade and also comes under the monopoly clause."

Mr. Wickersham was asked whether in his preparation of the case against the United Shoe Machinery Trust he had become aware many irregularities in the patent office and whether it was not true that the patent laws were used as a tool to create a monopoly.

"There is one thing that I can strongly in favor of, because it is the only way to prevent pyramiding of corporations," Mr. Wickersham said, "and that is a Federal law to prohibit any corporation owning stock in another corporation. That would be one of the provisions of a Federal incorporation law."

"If I continue to serve as Attorney-General till the end of Mr. Taft's term I intend to send some of the trust magnates to prison.

"The heads of the Turpentine Trust are already sentenced, and nothing can save them from serving their terms in jail except a Supreme Court decision in their favor.

"The men under indictment in the Beef Trust case in Chicago will also go to prison if I have my way, so will all others who knowingly, willfully and deliberately go on violating the law now that its meaning has been made so clear.

No Immunity For Trusts.

"That case has been set for November 20. I know all about the effort made to stop it, but there is no balance in this country that can stop those cases. They could no more stop those cases coming to trial than they could put spokes in the law of gravity. The Beef Trust men have exhausted every possible dilatory plea or by any one else could think of, and now they must face a trial of the case on its merits."

Attorney-General Wickersham was asked if there was any truth he had offered the Harvester Trust and the United States Steel Corporation immunity if they would voluntarily dissolve and reorganize in compliance with the Standard Oil and Tobacco Trust decisions. He said:

"It is not true. I have no authority to grant immunity to any one or to give permission to any corporation to do anything.

"In every case where a corporation dissolves in compliance with the law I shall present the proper petition to the court for an order dissolving the combination and for a permanent injunction restraining the disintegrated parts from ever reorganizing or recombining in violation of the law. The corporation will have to come to the bar and accept the orders of the court."

MATHEWSON, GIANTS' BEST BET IN SERIES

MATTY IS KING OF PITCHERS

To-day's article is the tenth published in the Daily AMERICAN, dealing with the players who may figure in the world's series, by R. W. Lardner. One will appear each day.

By R. W. LARDNER.

The greatest pitcher of them all, Christy Mathewson, will be John Meirnan's chief reliance in the coming world's series, if an earthquake doesn't swallow up the New York Giants and thus prevent them from winning the National League pennant.

Matty's record in the world's champion-ship games of 1905, in which the New Yorkers soundly trounced the Philadelphia team, has never been equaled and it is a cod bet that it never will be. Three times he fared the Mackmen, who were daggers then as they are now, and three times he shut them out. Without him the Giants would have had their hands full, at with him it was easy for them to take the measure of the Philadelphians.

No one is claiming that Matty is as cool now as he was in 1905. But he is still the king of pitchers, all things considered, and New York fans can thank him if the Giants win the highest baseball honors next month.

Mathewson will undoubtedly pitch the first game. He will finish the second one.

Marquard shows or Ames shows signs of weakening. Then he will probably come back and start the third, then rest an afternoon, or part of one, and go into the box in the fifth. There won't be any real rest for "Big Six," because he'll be warming up when he isn't actually pitching.

Matty began attracting attention to his pitching ability when he was with the Scranton Y. M. C. A. team, back in 1897. He entered Bucknell University and, in 1898, won all his games for the college nine. Princeton and Penn were among his victims. Honesdale, Pa., had a semi-pro team, and it gave Christy his first salaried job. But it couldn't pay him enough to hold him. The Taunton Club, then in the New England League, made him a better offer, and he accepted it.

From Taunton, Matty went to Norfolk in the Virginia League, and three scouts, representing New York and Cincinnati in the National and Philadelphia in the American, went right after him. The Norfolk Club sold him to all three, but Cincinnati got a temporary hold on him. Nobody appeared willing to pay the purchase price, but finally the Reds, not anxious to part with real money, traded him to the Giants. Norfolk then took its case to the courts and got the money, which was little enough.

All this changing about took place in the course of one season. The Fall of 1900 found him with the Giants. He pitched four games for them and lost them all. In the Spring of 1901 the New York team began using him regularly, and his record since then is the envy of all pitchers.

BIG OPERATORS IN STEEL RAID

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—Speculation was rife in the stock market to-day as to just what big operators were behind the most sensational bear raid the stock exchange has witnessed in a decade, in which Steel Trust stocks were hammered down more than fifteen points in three days before they rallied. The number of steel shares traded in yesterday was 717,000 of the common alone, making the largest transactions in a single issue since April, 1902.

A director of the Steel Trust said to the AMERICAN to-day:

"We have just passed through the biggest bear raid to which United States Steel Corporation has ever been subjected. It was world-wide in its plan and scope and was carefully worked out by men of great wealth and resources. We know their names or think we have excellent reasons for believing we know them. If some of them should be mentioned a real sensation would be created.

Worked Here and Abroad.

"For months they have been working quietly from both ends of the line—America and Europe. They have done their work—which is precious little so far as the public is concerned, except the fact that such rapid and inexplicable decline occurred.

"The unusual spectacle is presented of about 2-5 per cent of the shares of the most heavily capitalized company in the world changing hands within three days without in the least affecting the control of the public of the company. The company is as sound to-day as it was before the bear raid was made. It is making steel just as though its stocks had not been hammered down by speculators who wanted to make money.

"Had it not been for the wild-spread reports that we were asking the Department of Justice to aid us to dissolve, in order that we might comply with the requirements of the Sherman anti-trust law before we were attacked in the courts, the bear raid could not have been made so successful from the standpoint of the men who planned and executed it.

Expects Let-Up Now.

"The officers of the company kept silent, because had they denied one wild rumor, their denials would have been so perverted that other and more serious rumors would have sprung up. The object that engineered the raid has lined its pockets, has done its worst, and I confidently look for a recession of the shrinkages from this moment."

Wall Street was in confusion all day. The puzzling situation was aggravated by the secret silence of all the Steel Trust officers and directors. Why they have maintained this attitude nobody pretends to be able to assert.

SOCIETY STUNG WHEN BEES LIGHT ON FIFTH AVENUE

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—Fashionable Fifth avenue had the unusual experience of an invasion by a big swarm of bees, supposedly gone astray from some New Jersey apiary.

The insects, in a pyramid-shaped cloud, settled down in front of the residence of Mrs. Ogden Goelet. Their presence attracted a large crowd, several persons of which were stung. The dining-room of a nearby hotel was likewise invaded, causing a commotion among the guests.

The caretakers of the Goelet residence disposed of the greater part of the unwelcome visitors by covering a box left by the carpenters, in which the swarm had settled, and applying a torch to it.

WATCH JOYS AND 'GLOOMS' GIFT IN A SHRIMP

That's what T. E. Powers, the comic cartoonist thinks. The melancholy fate of the presumptuous shrimp is told by Mr. Powers in a twelve-act picture drama in the City Life section of the next Sunday AMERICAN.

This City Life section is the richest thing out next to the moist at Philadelphia. Mr. Powers contributes another one of his "Joy" and "Gloom" merriments. It begins joyously. But the Glooms, like the undertaker, were there at the finish.

BIX—I've always found it easy enough. And then some.

Dorothy Dix' "Primer for an Inquisitive Girl" is a cheerful string of "inside info." Try a sample—

Is the Summer Widower a gamecock, Madam?

"No, my child, only a tin-horn sport."

Kitty Gordon, you know the actress who says she prefers a homely man, has a column of "Nothing but Laughs."

Wenona Pelissier shows what sport may come to in the delicatessen future.

Just a step across to the serious side. There is an extract from David Graham Phillips's story, "The Price She Paid" dwindling in the current issue of the Cosmopolitan Magazine. This is illustrated in the City Life section by a thrilling drawing of one of the most adorable girls you ever saw.

These are some of the features of the City Life section of the next Sunday AMERICAN. It is one of those factors which mark the difference between the AMERICAN and other Sunday papers.

SUFFRAGETTES AT BARBECUE

Scores of Boston suffragettes will attend the big Democratic barbecue at Caledonian grounds to-day. They will combine pleasure with campaigning, and scores of Democratic orators are expected to become converts to their cause before night. Miss Margaret L. Foley, the determined orator, is expected to make a speech.

The barbecue promises to be the biggest of the Democratic Summer gatherings. Several startling features are scheduled. In the great baseball contest Mayor Fitzgerald will pitch for the City Hall and Martin Loomsbey will catch for the State delegation. Governor Foss will umpire at least one inning, and if he strikes good he may hold the indicator longer.

Among the guests at the barbecue, which begins at 1 p. m., will be Dudley Field Malone, assistant corporation counsel of New York, and one of the original promulgators of the Woodrow Wilson presidential boom. He is the son-in-law of Senator Gorman, and is rated one of the most brilliant orators in New York. While he is not known as the official representative of the Democratic campaigners, it is understood that he will feel out the situation among the local leaders during his visit.

Two steers and four lambs will furnish the food for the big event expected. They have been on the fire since early last night.

Judge Fitzsimmons of Rhode Island, and J. Weterman, Democratic candidate for Governor; Congressman O'Shaughnessy and a delegation of more than ever one hundred Providence Democrats are coming to the outing in a special train and with a band.

CHAUFFEUR HURT IN AUTOMOBILE WRECK

FALL RIVER, Sept. 23.—As a result of an automobile plunging over a bridge into Coles river, Swansea, Edward Hanson, a chauffeur, is at the Union Hospital in this city suffering from three broken ribs and a punctured lung. The automobile is a wreck at the bottom of the river. Three other men, who were in the car when the accident happened, escaped injury. The automobile belonged to John D. P. Jones of Providence. Hanson had taken Jones to Newport and was on his return to Providence when the machine skidded on the bridge and crashed through the fence, dropping into the water.

FOWLER OFF AGAIN ON FLIGHT

ROBERT G. FOWLER—Tries out his rebuilt aero and finds it better than before. Starts early to-day, and predicts he will be in New York in fifteen days.

Fowler Starts for Reno.

COLFAX, Cal., Sept. 22.—Robert G. Fowler's flight hipdate served him well in the air yesterday when he made two trial flights over Colfax and the mountains. After a severe trial in the evening he declared that everything was perfect and he is ready to tackle the mountains.

"I have eighteen flying days left," said Fowler, "and I am sure I can make New York in fifteen days, which is an average of 200 miles a day."

Fowler planned to stop in Reno this morning and then proceed to Fallon. He had decided to pass over Reno and land in Fallon, but he is willing to give up the half day that he will lose by stopping in Reno, now that he is sure of getting a good start.

By CALBRAITH P. RODGERS.

ELMIRA, N. Y., Sept. 23.—It was some day in the air. You can believe me. It is only about 110 miles nearer Chicago, but the figures show that I wandered about 215 miles in about six hours and thirty-seven minutes.

It wasn't exactly dangerous, but when you built into a head wind, a flock of mountains, a new kind of air pocket every two minutes, lose your way, wander about 105 miles out of your way, have to fight off a bunch of mystified people who want to tear up your machine as souvenirs, have to get up with willing but unskilled assistants and then have to go looking for your own special train toward Dusk—well, I had enough to keep my mind occupied for one day.

Lost His Way.

I lost my way because I misunderstood, or they told me wrong. It must be up to me.

The start was made and I got away against the wind without any trouble. I got up as fast as I could. I didn't like to linger around those rocky hills, because with the wind on the air pocket every two minutes, lose your way, wander about 105 miles out of your way, have to fight off a bunch of mystified people who want to tear up your machine as souvenirs, have to get up with willing but unskilled assistants and then have to go looking for your own special train toward Dusk—well, I had enough to keep my mind occupied for one day.

Lost His Way.

I lost my way because I misunderstood, or they told me wrong. It must be up to me.

The start was made and I got away against the wind without any trouble. I got up as fast as I could. I didn't like to linger around those rocky hills, because with the wind on the air pocket meant all kinds of pockets. It was up 2,000 for inside of two miles, and I had to go up 500 feet higher before I could get along steadily. It wasn't the warmest day in the world either, but I took off my vest to keep up the circulation.

Pretty soon I came to a good sized town. By consulting a guidebook at Binghampton, so I dropped down from about 3,000 feet and got 600 feet, looking for a place to land. Then I saw a couple of coal mines, and they gave me a shock. I had studied the route enough to know that there didn't belong to Binghampton, so I circled and circled until I had to give it up.

I made an examination of the machine and found it all right. I got away with the wind in the starboard and Brooklyn, and turned over my engine for me. I had a head wind again, all right, when I got straightened out for Binghampton, and it was fight every inch of the way. There were nothing but hills and I went up to about 3,000 feet to get over the peaks.

I hope to get away soon after 7 o'clock this morning. The machine is all right and I want to do some real travelling to-day.

ATWOOD MAY START ON HEARST FLIGHT AT BROCKTON FAIR

Harry N. Atwood, the Boston aviator, who returns next week to fly at the Brockton fair, which opens October 3, is considering seriously his start on the Hearst coast-to-coast flight from the fair grounds at Brockton.

Atwood, whose astounding aerial feats have made the world open its eyes, has not given up the idea of the largest of all cross-country flights, but his engagements have been so numerous that he has been unable to start.

Now that the cooler season is coming on he will begin and none of the aviators who started the coast-to-coast flight has met with a good break in luck, the Boston lad, who holds the record for cross-country flying, is preparing for his start.

MISS PENDLETON, NEW PRESIDENT OF WELLESLEY

ELLEN FITZ PENDLETON M.A.
COPYRIGHT BY E. LABEL 1910

GIRLS REGISTER AT WELLESLEY

To-day Wellesley's famous College Hall settles back again into its ivy covered red brick composure, after a week of being an animated exclamation point. For to-day at noon registration closed, and it's only very rash students who brave the wrath of all the powers by delaying their return after the single hour.

By this time practically all the grand old seniors, a bit self-conscious trying to set up to the part, have strolled up and signed their names—"Last names first, please." And the jolly juniors have bustled in, without a bit of trouble to live up to their parts. And the blustering sophomores and the verdant freshmen, they have all filed past the registration tables lugging their suitcases and umbrellas and tennis racquets and paddles and all the rest of the Summer gimcrackery.

This morning was the first chapel of the year, just an informal service, and this is the first year under President Ellen F. Pendleton. Tuesday morning will be the first formal chapel at which the senior class will turn out in all the dignity of cap and gown for the first time. Classes begin Tuesday morning, but between this noon and Tuesday morning there will be a tremendous amount of unpacking and hanging up pictures and trips to Boston to buy things, and reunions of all the doorsteps who haven't seen each other all Summer long.

The number of freshmen entering this year will not be announced until next week, but the officials say that the class will certainly be no larger than last year, as they are making every effort to limit the number entering, and have raised the entrance requirements for that purpose.

The formal inauguration services of President Pendleton take place on October 19, and preparations for these impressive exercises are being carefully made.

STRONG TESTIMONY AGAINST CAMORRIST

VITERBO, Italy, Sept. 23.—At the trial of the Camorrists, Professor Cattaneo testified he had been given to understand by a friend of Giovanni Raja, the alleged treasurer of the Camorra, that Carlos Alfano, charged with being the real head of the Camorra, was the instigator of the murder of Gennaro Cuocolo and his wife.

CLEVELAND'S SON AT PHILLIPS EXETER

EXETER, N. H., Sept. 23.—Among the students entered at Phillips Exeter Academy was Richard Cleveland, a son of Mrs. Grover Cleveland, who registered from Princeton, N. J.

He is quartered at Dunbar Hall, one of the newest of the dormitories, and also one of the finest students' dormitories in the country.

ITALY READY FOR WAR

PARIS, July 23.—Italy has her army and navy ready for war upon Turkey if her demands for an Italian protectorate over Tripoli are not promptly complied with. Advices from Rome say that the details for the instant mobilization of the Italian army have been perfected. Italian naval officers who have been on leave have been recalled and all of Italy's fighting ships are prepared for the word to sail.

Italy will present a strong front in an endeavor to compel the Ottoman Empire to recede from its attitude of defiance.

Grave complications are feared from the new war cloud which has arisen in the capitals of Europe. The advices from Rome are given the most serious consideration here and in London. Germany, Austria and France are deeply concerned over the outcome of the diplomatic situation that has arisen. That Italy is prepared to fight, if necessary, is apparent.

Germany Supports Plan.

The Italian plan, according to these advices, embraces a bombardment of Tripoli and simultaneously an expedition of 20,000 troops to block the Turkish coast along the Adriatic Sea and to operate in Macedonia, Syria and Arabia with a view to protecting the numerous Italians living in those countries. The latter action, however, will be taken only as an extreme measure.

While Italy is perfecting her plans every effort is being made to induce Turkey to come to an amicable arrangement to insure to Italy a preponderating influence over Tripoli. Italy, indeed, is even willing to go to the extent of leaving Tripoli under the sovereignty of the Sultan.

It is understood that Germany and Austria are supporting this latter plan and that France and Italy stand ready in case of its acceptance to indemnify Turkey.

The Italian squadron is rendezvousing at Taranto and is under orders to be ready to start at a moment's notice. The commander of the squadron has instructions which are to be opened when his vessels are on the high seas.

It is believed, the advices from Rome say, that the seemingly belligerent attitude of Turkey is only a bluff to save her military honor, and at the same time obtain a larger indemnity from Italy.

A squadron of torpedo boat destroyers which left Messina for Brindisi has been recalled, after five hours in stormy weather, to return to harbor, owing to damages sustained by several of the vessels.

American Cruiser Expected.

The Rome advises say that the Italian fleet will be divided into five divisions, and the Duke of the Abruzzi will command one of these, composed of twenty-two battleships, twenty-eight torpedo boats, two cruisers and six submarines. The Rome dispatch adds that Taranto has been proclaimed in a state of siege.

The United States scout cruiser Chester is expected to arrive in Tripoli next week to protect the members of the American archaeological expedition at Cyrene. The members of the expedition include Professor Richard Norton. The cruiser Chester has a full supply of ammunition and carries a crew of 500 men.

NO DIVORCE FOR ARTIST'S WIFE

"If you want to prove that you love me, go to Reno and get a divorce."

That is what Anson K. Cross, an artist and instructor at the Normal Art School, said to his pretty wife, Sarah S. Cross.

Mrs. Cross was anxious to prove her affection and soon was on her way to Reno. Upon her arrival she found a letter from her husband awaiting her. It contained this advice:

"Visit the court room and listen to the manner in which divorces are granted. Many of them are granted on stories concocted there. I will not contest the suit if you will not ask for alimony, and allow of you to obtain freedom. You can show me that you love me if you will go to Reno request and secure the divorce."

The fashion in which she was advised. When she had applied for a divorce, the Judge inquired why she wanted it. She replied that her husband and she had agreed to separate in order that he might showed the Court the letter from Cross.

Nothing doing," said the Judge. Reno will be deprived of easy places to get divorce, but it isn't so simple as all that. I do not like the idea of husband and wife separating with ease. The petition is dismissed.

Mr. Cross said his wife lived at Wilthrop Highlands. Mrs. Cross has an office at No. 6 Beacon street.

FOOD PRICES JUMP AGAIN

increases in the price of wheat, flour and oats quickly following the Canadian defeat of reciprocity will still further add to the high cost of living. Sugar prices continue to jump and coffee has joined the higher price procession, selling now at 12 cents a pound wholesale in New York.

The greatest advance in wheat was recorded at Duluth, where traders paid as much as 93 cents a bushel for the spring grain than they did before reciprocity was rejected. Minneapolis, the greatest milling centre of the country, showed a maximum net advance of six cents.

Increases of a less sensational character were made at Kansas City, St. Louis, Omaha and Chicago. Immense stocks of grain in the Canadian Chicago acted as a check to a severe advance. The Chicago market was also affected by the imperial crush centres.

It is by no means certain that the net causes in the price of wheat and allied foodstuffs indicate that the maximum has been reached. One of the most prominent wheat traders of the country said yesterday wheat, the grade used most exclusively for flour flour, is going to touch $1 or even 20 cents a bushel.

A further show to the ultimate consumer may result when millstuffs have engulfed the larger markets. In some countries the price advanced as much as eight cents. This in substantial form probably will mean increased cost of material to brewers and, as has been the history of previous advances in prices, smaller sized beer glasses may again become popular with saloonists.

W. R. HEARST ON RECIPROCITY

LONDON, Sept. 23.—The Daily Mail to-day prints the following:

"Mr. William Randolph Hearst, proprietor of the New York American and other newspapers in the United States has vigorously advocated the reciprocity movement both in the United States and Canada. He was in London yesterday and made the following statement:

"My belief in reciprocity is in no way affected by the fact that Canada does not believe in it.

I believe the American tariff should be reduced. If we do not succeed in making a breach in the tariff wall at one place, we must try another.

I am returning to America tomorrow to labor for extension of reciprocity to other nations which may be willing to enter into trade agreements with us affecting the duty we shall absolve them.

There seems to have been idea in England—some of your newspapers expressed it—that the very fact that the United States desired reciprocity with Canada was a sufficient reason why Canada should beware of it. That is absurd. Let me give an example of kindergarten simplicity.

Sees Democratic Victory.

If I have a shop and a man comes in to buy a suit of clothes I assume they will be of some benefit to him, and, if for that reason I refuse to sell them—well, in that case I do not think I must develop my shop into a department store very soon.

Reciprocity properly presented is a beautiful thing and should be both the countries conceived.

The Democratic party in America is probably more in favor of it than the Republican party and is certainly more in favor of a general tariff reduction.

I believe the Democratic party will come into power at the next election. It already has a majority in the lower house, in the Senate reasonably close, and the chances are that the Senate will read to make it closer. A slight further gain will give it the complete possession of the machinery of government and then they will be a strongest spirit in favor of tariff reductions and reciprocity trade relations with other powers.

No Unfriendly Feeling.

I do not think the election will create any unfriendly feeling between the United States and Canada. All I do think is that Canada instead of being the first nation to receive the benefits of the new scheme will now be among the last.

Reciprocity would certainly have increased the prosperity of the whole of the British empire, which seems to me to be growing steadily closer in its

WORLD SERIES CONTEST HOT

The standing of World's Series Contest candidates published to-day shows but a few changes amongst the leaders.

Jack O'Connor of Milford, who was sixth in yesterday's list, has moved up one position, pushing "Tim" Reagan of Springfield into sixth place.

M. S. Benjamin of Boston has jumped into the leaders' class and is now eighth.

As the result of Benjamin's activity, "Neil" Harrington of Waltham is now eleventh, having lost his position among the leading ten.

William F. Holihan of Providence is showing consistent and active work, jumping in to-day's list from fourteenth to twelfth.

E. H. Baker of Boston moved up one place, from seventeenth to sixteenth.

J. B. Fanning of Brighton, Thomas J. McDermott of Putnam, Ct., Fred M. Jennings of Roxbury, Roger Hutchins of Beverly and a number of others are close contenders for a position among the leading ten.

It's anybody's race.

The following coupon appears in the Sunday AMERICAN October 1. It means that next week is going to be a most important one among the candidates. Good work done now will probably clinch the story.

HOUDINI OUTWITS FOUR SEA CAPTAINS

Down at T wharf to-day four veteran captains of the fishing craft are telling their brother seamen what a clever man is Harry Houdini. They had put Houdini to the test at Keith's Theatre. They placed him on his back on a plank and wound fathoms of rope around him, using the same difficult or safety knots in ropes. Houdini managed to free himself in seventeen seconds. The captains are Richard McDonald, Azra Ely, Thomas Porter and E. J. Cunningham.

FAT REDUCTION IS NO SIN

The purpose of Beauty is to refine the native uncouthness of human nature. We all bow to its power. It is the only aristocracy that has no attitude of shadow. Also this means the fat woman must seem instead of rule, for beauty in women is a composite of form, line and feature.

Thousands of fat women are beautiful of face. But they lag behind in the race for beauty. The good-natured but ponderous outline dashes the fairer hope for fine-spun loveliness.

Now pretty fat women can reduce flesh and retain the good complexion. Besin in a very simple way. No exercising or dieting is necessary. Let Dean take one Marmola Prescription Tablet after meals and before bed for a month. The fat will simply fade away. Not suddenly, as if sick, but from, but the loss will be uniform. The face will not go scrawny as if skin fades away. The health will improve, and the form become brilliant, like a specialized. Marmola Tablets are a concentrated herbal compound made by the famous fashionable prescription. Any druggist can supply you. Get

URGES PAYROLLS FOR ALL WIVES AND MOTHERS

By GERTRUDE L. MARVIN.

Dr. Antoinette Konikow, the well known physician, socialist orator, and hostess of Maxim Gorky, when he was in this city. In spite of her reputation as a radical, considers motherhood the "sweetest and best life for any woman," and characterizes the present rush of women into the business world as "a mere step in their evolution back to their true place as matters in the home." She demands a definite wage for the wife and mother, to be paid either by the State or the husband and father.

In an interview, she decried the hasty judgments passed on the Sinclair and Stidham divorce cases.

"No one has the right to criticise those people," said Dr. Konikow, "no one knows all the circumstances that have led up to their present actions. I am inclined to think the women of that city had the courage to be willing to face the criticism and censure of the public, rather than continue to live as the wives of men whom they had ceased to love.

"The trouble is that modern marriages are not based on love. Instead everything is based on hypocrisy, and we are not even willing to appreciate it when people insist on being honest.

"I think that these two cases are good illustrations of the advantage of trial marriage. Personally I favor trial marriages.

Urges Freer Divorce

"It is only right for a woman to have a chance to find out what it is going to be like before she enters upon a relationship that is supposed to last the rest of her life. Most girls do not know anything about what a married life means, for they women bring their daughters up in absolute ignorance. They don't know anything about true love which is the only right basis for a marriage.

"Those little silly things, they have some passing infatuation which they call love and then by the time they find out, because they are tied in the name for life. It is not right.

"If we are not yet ready for trial marriages, we should at least have freer divorce laws. The very fact that two people want to get a divorce from each other ought to be sufficient ground for granting it, without dragging all the most intimate details of their relationship into the public courts. It is an outrage. No woman ought to have to tell the reasons for which she wants a divorce from a man under certain circumstances.

"The result of our present strict divorce laws is soon going to be that people will simply laugh at them and pay no attention to them, just as they do in Russia. Over there the laws are even stricter than they are here. The church steps in and makes it practically impossible to get a divorce. And as a result, there is much more flagrant immorality. In the highest circles of the nobility, no one thinks anything of it when people live together without being married. The marriage laws are simply laughed at, and the people won't take the chances of getting married.

"Marriages are not based on real love very often. So many other considerations enter in. The girl wants to get away from her own home, she wants to marry a man because he has a lot of money, or she is blinded by a physical infatuation. But none of these things can be the basis for happy married life, and it is cruel to make people stay together when they are unhappy.

"I am a strict monogamist, however. I believe in the legal recognition of marriage. I do not think it is impossible for a woman to love more than one man at one time, and I think she should be absolutely faithful to that man.

But it is possible for a woman to love a man, and a few years later on, to learn to love another man very deeply. No two people can develop at exactly the same rate and in the same way. Perhaps one of them grows along certain lines rapidly, and the other stands still. The relations between them cannot be the same, and the love must change or die out, too. Of course, there are some people so perfectly mated that the love never seems to change but that is very rare.

"The important thing is there must be no compulsion about the relationship between the two. If they feel they have got to keep on loving each other all their lives, that in itself is enough to take away all the spontaneity.

Motherhood the Best.

"This may sound radical, but I am not radical, because I hold some very Conservative opinions. I believe that motherhood is the sweetest and happiest life for any woman. And I believe that every woman should prepare herself for motherhood as her greatest privilege. I think this present effort of women to step out of the home and compete with men and find a larger life, is only a step in their evolution back to the home. For that is the primary purpose for which all women were created—to be mothers.

"The trouble is that today, everything is based on hypocrisy. Woman's work as a mother and a housekeeper is not respected. And one reason for this is that she is not properly paid.

"The greatest advantage of women going into business as much as she has in the last few years is that perhaps as a result she may in the future put a truer money value on her services as a wife and mother.

"I do not care whether she is paid by her husband or by the State, but she ought to receive a definite salary which would increase her own self-respect, and the respect in which she is held by other people.

Study for Motherhood

"Motherhood, should be prepared for much more seriously than it is. A mother should study medicine to take care of the child's body, she should be familiar with politics, and art, and literature, and scientific methods, in order to guide his ideas and train his mind.

"The greatest demands in the world are made on the mother. Mrs. Charlotte P. Stetson has very justly called housework 'sweat shop labor,' the way it is conducted today. If women want to make it out of the class of sweat shop labor, they must raise the status of motherhood, by demanding just pay for their work, and by preparing for it more seriously, just as they study to enter a profession.

"We can achieve ideal motherhood only under socialism, because then only shall we have economic freedom, and it is only when every man can earn enough to support his family decently, and every woman receives the just pay for the services which she renders the State, that the economic problem will be lightened. Then love can be left unhindered and free.

DISCOVERED REMEDY FOR ASTHMA AND HAY FEVER

A Kansas Chemist Discovered a Simple Home Remedy for Hay Fever and Asthma and Makes a Generous Offer.

Mr. D. J. Lane, a chemist, located at 827 Scott Bldg., St. Mary's, Kas., has discovered a simple home remedy for hay fever and asthma. To test it, he sent some to people who had been suffering with hay fever and asthma for forty years and, to their delight, they state they were quite cured. Mr. Lane is so proud of his discovery, and has so much confidence in its ability to cure, that he will send a $1.00 bottle by express to any one who will write for it. He also asks that no one buy the medicine if it cures, the one taking it is to be the judge and report its effect within ten days after receipt of the remedy.

If you suffer from hay fever or asthma, write for a bottle at once. Send no money. Your name and address on a postal card will do.

Here is Quickest and Surest Cure For All Sore Feet.

It is not necessary to walk on your sore, tender feet as told in the old adage. Here is a treatment that brings relief immediately. It is considered almost a wonder by the medical profession.

Dissolve two tablespoonfuls of Calocide compound in a basin of hot water. Soak the feet in this for full fifteen minutes, gently massaging the sore parts. (Less time will not give desired results.) Repeat each night until cure is permanent. The effect is almost like magic. The soreness disappears instantly and the tired feet feel as though cold could not be near them. Corns and callouses can be rubbed right off. Nearly every painful swollen tender foot need but a few treatments. Bunions have the inflammation all drawn out and are soon reduced to normal size. Calocide is the most remarkable foot remedy known to science and should not be confused with patent powders and tablets that so many have tried, to pain. A twenty-five cent package is said to be sufficient to cure the worst feet. Any good druggist has it in stock or will quickly get it from his wholesale house.

SEEKS TUCKER CASE REWARD

A mysterious man, whose name is kept secret by the authorities of Weston, declares that he could furnish evidence that will show almost conclusively that Charles L. Tucker killed Mabel Page. This man says that he saw Tucker leave the Page house on the day of the memorable murder.

This man will appear before the Board of Selectmen of Weston to-day and demand the reward of $2,500 offered soon after the Page murder, but which has never been given to anyone as a dozen others will also call for a share of the reward and their promises to be a mighty long fight before the selectmen.

If the new witness can certify what he says, it will be the most remarkable and substantial corroboration ever made in the case. Whether Tucker has executed an innocent man, or whether he actually slew Miss Mabel Page has been one of the most perplexing questions ever raised in Massachusetts criminal records.

At the time of the Tucker trial it was reported that a man had declared that he saw Tucker leave the Page house, but no evidence was ever produced in this effect. The case against Tucker was purely circumstantial and there was no direct evidence to show that he was in the Page home on the day of the murder, although evidence was produced to show that he was near the scene of the crime.

Efforts were made at the time to find the man who was reported to have this testimony. The police and the newspapers were searched in vain for him. The case went to trial without this testimony.

Recently, however, he appeared in Weston and told the selectmen that he was his story that actually led to Tucker's arrest. He said that he would appear to-morrow and claim the reward, and that he would be able to prove that he was entitled to the money.

Officials at Weston to-day declined to reveal the man's name, or to make an comment on his story prior to his appearance before the board. "We will not say whether or not we believe it until we have heard all the claims," said one of them to-day.

A dozen others will probably appear and claim the reward. The selectmen voted last March to disburse the money.

MRS. SUYDAM WILL WED NOBLE

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—Mrs. Walter Lispenard Suydam, Jr., who ran away from her millionaire husband because she loved Frederick Noble, son of a Brooklyn plumber, spoke freely today as to her adventure.

She hopes, she declared, her husband brings a divorce suit against her and wins it. As soon as a decree is granted she will become the wife of young Noble—or, as she calls him, "Billy" (not because he is one of the Nell Brinkley type of "Billies," but because his middle name is William.

Money? She does not care for it. She has plenty of her own. $50,000 is a mere bagatelle to her. She doesn't want any of Mr. Suydam's—won't even get it, for one of his ultimatums: "Billy" Noble is quite able, she asserts, to support her.

The Future: It may take care of itself.

When a reporter called upon Mrs. Suydam at the Regina apartment she wore a brown polo coat—quaintly hung on over a shirtwaist and skirt—and a white straw hat with a turned up red brim. She was attractive, without being particularly pretty and seemed to rely more upon her bright wits than her beauty to impress men.

$5,000 Vaudeville Offer.

"I've had an offer of as high as $5,000 a week to appear upon the vaudeville stage," volunteered the young woman.

"Why don't you take it?" was asked.

"My place is in a home, as a wife—that's any woman's sphere," retorted Mrs. Suydam.

"As Fred Noble's wife?"

"Well, I expect to marry Mr. Noble if Mr. Suydam brings divorce action against me," she said.

"Does that declaration about a home go any further?" asked the interviewer. "Does it mean that you will bring up children, too, in this new home?"

Mrs. Suydam shrugged her shoulders. She said:

"Is that necessary—the question of children; isn't it enough for a wife to care for a husband, without bringing in the matter of children?"

"No one can understand except Mr. Suydam and myself, how outlived we were one for another," she said. "I wouldn't go back, wouldn't go back for all the money in the world."

Understand Each Other.

"Mr. Noble and I understand each other perfectly; we have had courage enough to cut away from all affiliations and brave the scorn and denunciation of the world; what more could any one ask? Mr. Suydam is white clean through; the only thing is he and I did not understand each other and should not have married.

"Now I'm going to stay right here in the Regina apartments all Winter and I expect (I) Spring. I've just sent for a music machine that Fred owns to keep me company when he is out here. I'm not going away. I think the world I can go in the way of public criticism has already come, and I can stand the rest of it."

FOLKS PAST FIFTY MUST USE CASCARETS

What Glasses Are to Weak Eyes, Cascarets Are to Weak Bowels—A 10-Cent Box Will Truly Amaze You.

Most old people must give to the bowels some regular help, else they suffer from constipation. The condition is perfectly natural. It is just as natural as it is for old people to walk slowly. For age is never so active as youth. The muscles are less elastic. And the bowels are muscles.

So all old people need Cascarets. One might as well refuse to aid weak eyes with glasses as to neglect this gentle aid to weak bowels. The bowels must be kept active. This is important at all ages, but never so much as at fifty.

Age is not a time for harsh physics. Youth may occasionally whip the bowels into activity. But a lash can't be used every day. What the bowels of the old need is a gentle and natural tonic. One that can be constantly used without harm. The only such tonic is Cascarets and they cost only 10 cents per box at any drug store. They work while you sleep.

Can the People of Boston Credit the Horrifying Fact That Right at Their Very Doors, Within a Day, Has Been Discovered a Condition of Labor Atrocity the Unveiling of Which Will Shock the Entire Community?

The details of the conditions involved are revolting enough to be incredible. Yet they are true, and all Massachusetts, all New England, every decent man and woman with a Christian heart, no matter where they live throughout this entire country, will hang their heads for shame that such things could be in this progressive, Christian Commonwealth.

Within twenty-four hours members of the staff of this newspaper have witnessed labor conditions in a certain foundry in Greater Boston, which are so inhuman, so indecent, and in every way so abhorrent to all our ideas of civilized existence, as to call for the holding of a mass meeting of indignant citizenship under the eaves of the foundry where such conditions were seen.

The public will be told the facts to-morrow by the SUNDAY AMERICAN.

And the day after the Governor of this Commonwealth will be asked to say what he thinks of the State officials who have permitted such conditions to exist, and what steps he intends to take towards their exemplary punishment.

Harvard Team Plays First Game a Week from To-Day

By TED PARKE.

An hour and a half of signal drill followed by a tedious drill in the rudimentary principles of the game such as falling on the ball, tackling the dummy and the like, wound up the first week's practice for the Harvard football squad this morning on Soldiers Field, the afternoon session being omitted to-day as has been the custom on the Saturday of the first week of work each year.

The long workout to-day put on the finishing touches for the hard scrimmaging which will come the first of the week, in preparation for the game with Bates a week from to-day, and when the men quit practice to-day, every one was in fairly first class condition, few having any superfluous weight, the best of the week having gotten in some good licks in reducing the candidates to proper condition.

During this past week great progress has been made in the training of the Harvard team. On Monday fifty men reported, raw and untutored, as it were. To-day the same men, added to by numbers somewhat, left the field, looking like the oldest of football warriors, and with their heads chocked full of the science of the game of the gridiron.

In addition the condition of the men is the best so one yet having received even the slightest semblance of an injury. This augurs well for the success of the team as far as condition goes, for the first week's work is the hardest, and in rather tender condition, usually is productive of a number of hurts that do the team no good.

Hardest Work Yet.

Yesterday so far the hardest work of the week was done, the new apparatus for the first time this season, girded for battle, with shoulder pads on and head gears dangling at their sides, in good old gridiron style. The occasion was the announcement by Captain Fisher that for the first time this year there would be "scrimmaging" under the linesmen and end rushes.

For three-quarters of an hour after coming on the field the two varsity teams, the make-up of which was so recently changed as to rob them of any particular identity, ran snappily through signals up and down the field before the largest and prettiest gallery of the season that has assembled on Soldiers Field, on the side lines, thus far this year, and when what is also known to the game of football was tried out, not yesterday, but the day before yesterday when the men lined up for signal for all they were worth. The lines were divided as nearly as possible, according to ability and skill of the men, the ball being to open order, and the men to tackle other, to give both lines an opportunity to play on the offensive and defensive.

Captain Fisher did not get into the work until along about the end of the second quarters of an hour which was devoted to this, Coach Haughton doing the coaching of the men.

McGuire Looks Good.

Several parts were brought straight to one's notice by this game of breaking through, concerning the relative ability of some of the men on the line. McGuire, the big chap out for guard, is clever in keeping himself from getting blocked out, but he crowdes for the charge in such a manner he is apt to be off side, and so spill any plays, so that his value is more negative than positive, while Bradley, freshman captain and tackle last year, did some good work in showing his ability at tackle, holding at bay his attackers at all times, and invariably smashing through his opponents on the defense. The same was true of Captain Fisher when he got in the fray, but this was expected of him.

Stow Rather Awkward.

Stow, the big chap out for guard, was awkward, playing so high that he was easily spilled, while Jones, his running mate, had the same fault. Leslie, a tackle playing the other side of the line from Gardner, showed exceptional fleetness and strength in his position and if Mahan as though these two men might make a very clever pair of tackles.

The most important addition to the squad yesterday was that of H. Rogers, end on the varsity two years ago. Rogers has been coach Maine all Summer tossing hay, and he returns to college in great trim and needs better than formerly, tipping the scales at 185 pounds. He possesses great speed and looks to be made of superfluous weight on him. He was out with the end rushing yesterday for his in and with good reason, that he will be used over to the tackle squad and drilled in the science of this position. With his speed, weight and knowledge of the game, he should prove to be an extraordinary man in this line.

It begins to look as though Coach Haughton were contemplating secret practice in the near future, for the first time at the open end of the Stadium was closed yesterday. Last year secret practice was begun much earlier than usual, but it looks as though it did not profit the first game. It looks as though Haughton will wait until to begin secret practice.

WESLEYAN VARSITY SCORES THREE TIMES

MIDDLETOWN, Sept. 23.—Coach Larry Yerbly got the Wesleyan squad through a hard scrimmage practice yesterday lasting twenty minutes, the longest of the season. The varsity scored three touchdowns against the scrub, kicking two successful goals.

Hutchinson, who was the heaviest man on the line last year, has just passed off his examinations, and will be on to-day if eligibility is now removed. As an offset to this encouraging news, Sage was announced to-day that Sage, who has been working up well as center, has resigned and will not be admitted to the freshman class. This is exceedingly hard luck, and greatly felt, as it was planned to have him play in 1905.

PRINCETON TIGERS IN POOR SHAPE

PRINCETON, Sept. 23.—After the usual preliminary drill on essentials of the game the Tigers scrimmaged for fifteen minutes. It took them four minutes to score on the scrubs. Sawyer carried it over from mid-field. Hagerger said the score was due to the gaping holes in one of the tackle ends. Most of the varsity gains were around the ends. Score, 5 to 0.

The scrubs tore up the varsity line for twenty-five yards. Severe held on for five yard line. Norman and McCormick pierced the line for short gains. Then the punting has not been satisfactory. Only a consistent line of punting could help the proposition.

Edwards, who has been doing the punting, gets some long ones off in practice, but can't get them off in scrimmage.

BATLER KICKS GOAL FROM 35-YARD LINE.

ITHACA, Sept. 23.—The hardest scrimmage in recent years at this time of the Fall was given the Cornell football team yesterday. For fifty minutes they were sent through a gruelling match, and the varsity scored on the scrubs, while Quarterback Butler made the goal from the field in the third forward line.

Butler's goal was also placed Halfback Hill in a position to make the down, Hoyt kicking Extra Point. The old quad left end for the first time, Hamilton, a big 1904 freshman, playing with Captain Munk went back to left.

Ten guards, Hale and Bacon, were on the scrub team, while Franklin and O'Rourke played the tackles for the varsity. Weldenthal relieved Whyte at centre. Underhill and O'Brien played the backs, placed for the first time on the scrub eleven.

DARTMOUTH SCORES ON FORWARD PASS.

HANOVER, Sept. 23.—At least twenty-eight men were used in the football scrimmage at Dartmouth yesterday. Scrimmage lasted forty-five minutes, with frequent breaks for instruction. No touchdown was made by either side, the only score was made when Hogsett crossed the line with a forward pass from the 20 yard line on extra downs. Snow, a Winthrop boy, who captained the crack freshman basketball team last year, and brother of the greenbones who Coach Cavanaugh has directed the past two years, has never before played football, but like the other rookies, seems to be doing great work. As fullback on the first team yesterday he played a star game and went crashing through guard and tackle for substantial gains.

Gibson, Estey, Lyden and Hayes also did good work, or, the monstrous guard of the third team is speeding up in great shape and making a good bid for the first string position. Sixty-five subs have been given practice, so candidates for the Dartmouth team there seems to be a wealth of good material. Rogers, captain of the Andover team last year, is showing up well, and Curtis of Phillips Exeter, with Wayman of Chicago, is getting some exceptionally good punts.

The teams lined up as follows: First team—Captain Butler, Elcock and Eagle; horn 8., Whitmore lg., Gibson c., Bennett rg., Sawyer rt., Dunbar and Tilley re., Hogsett and Pidgon q., Estey and Barlow hb., Snow and Hayes fb., Dean rhb., Second team—Ahlwede re., Griffin rt., Beer rg., Searry c., Farnum lg., Margeson and Bigelow ll., Hayes le., Llewellyn q., Cummings rhb., Lorden fb., Morey and Hoban hb.

PENN ISSUES CALL FOR MEN.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 23.—Although yesterday afternoon's work on Franklin Field was the hardest yet indulged in by the University of Pennsylvania football squad, the coaches were far from decided as to the exact make-up of the eleven which will meet Gettysburg in the first game of the season, September 30.

Following the preliminary work the teams were divided up and put through the first of the scrimmages to decide the make-up of the varsity team.

Calls were issued this afternoon for the following players: Davis, hw.; Fisher, Wharton '14, Heeder, law '15; Keenan, Wharton '14, Rodford, Wharton '14; Lundgren, Architect '14; Hassler, Wharton '14, Kenyon, Drexel; Mercer, Layton, Duffy, Stafford, Downing, Arnold, Wetherill, Singer, Meeker, Mellor, Hood, Perot, Thorpe and Weir.

WORCESTER, Sept. 23.—The last work out for the Holy Cross eleven was held on Fitton Field yesterday and Coach Larkin gave the squad considerable the hardest session yet, and in doing so polished off the rough edges which at first existed. Four ten-minute periods were gone through by the varsity team.

In to-day's gridiron struggle with the Boston College eleven, Coach Larkin figures on an easy victory and will employ a number of his second string players against the Boston collegians. Sixty-five subs have been given practice, so candidates for the Dartmouth team there seems to be a wealth of good material. Rogers, captain of the Andover team last year, is showing up well, and Curtis of Phillips Exeter, with Wayman of Chicago, is getting some exceptionally good punts.

DEAN OF WOBURN BREAKS LEG IN HIS FIRST GAME

In the last period of the game between Milton High and Woburn High, at Milton yesterday, Dean, Woburn's quarter-back, after gaining 10 yards around Milton's left end, was tackled hard by Gustafson of Milton, and his right leg broken a little above the knee. Dean will be unable to play again this season.

The game was the first played this season by either team and was rather ragged at times.

FORBES COMING EAST FOR BOUTS

Harry Forbes, the dapper Chicago bantamweight, is soon to start for the East. And when Harry arrives in this section of the country we are sure to see some great fighting.

Forbes is known throughout the West as the original "rough back" kid. He is now thirty-one years of age. Harry started to earn a livelihood by boxing in 1897. After making a brilliant record, he quit the game in 1903.

Forbes remained out of the roped arenas for several years, but then returned. And when Harry again donned the gloves, he appeared to be better than ever.

The Windy City mill artist has a draw battle to his credit with the clever Johnny Coulon, who is the present holder of the championship of the world.

One of the chief reasons why Forbes is coming East is to engage in any coming battle which may be started for the $1,000 belt offered by Battling Nelson. Forbes is confident that he would be able to defeat any of the present lightweights in the game.

Forbes is a regular whirlwind when in action. He packs a terrific punch and knows every wrinkle of scientific boxing. Harry is after his man from the top of the going when the fight ends. He never has left his retirement. Forbes has not lost a single battle.

If Forbes comes to Boston he would make an excellent opponent for Young Jimmy Walsh or Al Delmont. Walsh and Delmont are both good at 118 and would be able to give the Westerner a stiff battle.

JOHNSON BOUT MAY BE STOPPED

By JACK CONWAY.

All England is up in arms in an effort to stop the proposed twenty-round fight between Jack Johnson and Bombardier Wells, which is billed to take place in London, on October 2. The movement to "hold-up" the bout between the burly Galveston Black and England's cherished "hope" was started by the Bishop of London who was backed up by Lord Mayor Strong. The movement to get a crusher on the battle has spread over England like a tidal wave.

If the bout takes place in spite of the present opposition, Johnson will win as he pleases.

Wells is the heavyweight champion of England. Physically, he shapes up as good as most heavyweights; in the matter of experience, however, he is woefully lacking.

He is twenty-three, and has been in the roped arena only eighteen months. During this time he has engaged in eighteen battles and has won all but one, Gunner Moir knocking him out in four rounds. If Moir could knock Wells out, what chance has the English "hope" against a man of Johnson's ability?

Wells was the heavyweight title by defeating Iron Hague, who is nothing more than a big duffer.

"Porky" Flynn lost a twenty-round scrap to Wells when he last visited England. Wells has not fighting form about him. He fines up to the twenty rounds, and still doesn't send him down for the count.

In size, Wells is a giant. He stands six feet four inches in height, has a reach of eighty-two inches, which is greater than that of any other man in the ring, and weighs 196 pounds. The only thing about this lanky Britisher is that his waist line is but thirty-two inches.

Beginning October 1, Johnson will to Paris to meet Jewey with Hugo Mendeln in eighteen rounds. The champion is scheduled to fight in Australia on December 26. But ever since the boxing game has been revived in New York, the "negro peril" has displayed an inclination to give the Australian premier the fold goodbye. He has wired McIntosh, asking for an extension of time before he starts his contract.

Jack Woodman received a wire from McIntosh yesterday, in which the Australian promoter stated that he would agree to get Langford a match with Johnson, he would start for the Antipodes at once. With Johnson likely to sail for this country any day, Woodman does not see what chance there is of Jack taking "Sam" to Australia.

If Langford should go to Australia and not get a match with Johnson, he would lose a most lucrative financial loss. He would probably take two months. He would have to pay his fares while in Australia, most, would not let him over $15,000. On the other hand, if he remains at home he can clean up more coin.

Young Saylor sends word that he is anxious for his bout with Battling Nelson at the Arena, Aug. 4 next. Frankie Saylor is one of the best lightweights in the country and will nevertheless whether Nelson will be able to "work" for the limit. The Dane has many friends since he came to this town. Frankie is a clever boxer and has also given a clever exhibition of boxing than Nelson in his scrap with Billy Nixon of Cambridge.

Whether Matt Wells and Packey McFarland will box ten rounds in Boston depends with Billy Gibson. McFarland has been training for the heavyweights for Gibson. The contractors have agreed to have it ready by November 1. Gibson would be foolish to let McFarland go on at the Garden on October 19 when he can use him with Wells at his own club two weeks later.

Young Loughrey, who meets "Rocky" Troupe, has received a good offer to box with Jimmy Reddy and English coloured weights in Paris this month. Jimmy Loughrey, however, has not accepted the offer, as he is waiting to get somewhere near home so as to see New York this Winter.

WAKEFIELD PITCHER FANS NINETEEN MEN

WAKEFIELD, Sept. 23.—The Wakefield High School Baseball Team opened its season on the park yesterday afternoon by defeating Lynn Classical High School, 8 to 1.

Fred McKie pitched great ball for the winners, allowing only three hits, and having nineteen strikeouts. Binney was touched in batting, getting four hits in five times at bat. William McKie, fielding star, played in the Boston College club's title to Cravath by purchase without an error.

CANADIAN CHAMPS WIN MAT BOUT

ADAMS, Sept. 23.—Wilfred Barrette of Montreal, Canadian welterweight champion, here last night defeated Joe Kennedy of the New England welterweight champion, in a wrestling match at the North Berkshire A. A. Barrette secured the first fall in 26 minutes and the second fall in 18 minutes.

Three preliminaries in the North Berkshire A. C. tournament were also held. Peter Miles defeated Young Kozinsky in the 120 to 130 pound class; Young Gamache and Kid Tickey wrestled to six draw without a fall in the 120 to 130 class and Albert Barron defeated John Malloy in the 120 to 140 class.

PHILLIES GET CRAVATH FROM MINNEAPOLIS

CINCINNATI, Sept. 23.—The National baseball commission in a decision promulgated yesterday awarded Player Clarence Cravath to the Philadelphia National League club. The commission declared the evidence showed that the Philadelphia club last June secured an option from the Minneapolis club to purchase the release of Cravath for $4,000 and that it is entitled to his services.

As Cravath was drafted by the Pittsburg club pending an investigation of his status, that draft is set aside and the Chicago American League club selection of Player Peters from the Minneapolis club, contingent on the Philadelphia National League club's title to Cravath by purchase or release, is allowed.

FOGEL ANXIOUS TO PLAY HIGHLANDERS

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 23.—Manager Doolin of the Phillies is enthusiastic over the prospects of a post-season series with the New York Highlanders.

"Fine! We'll beg 'em sure," said the leader of the Quaker City yesterday when he learned that President Fogel had issued a challenge to President Frank Farrell of the Yankees for a series of seven games.

"We had the best team in our league and I believe would have won the pennant but for injuries to players and other misfortunes," said Doolin.

Doolin received a message from President Fogel yesterday announcing that arrangements had been completed for the consent of President Ban Johnson of the American League to challenge the New Yorkers.

Football Solons Make Few Amendments to New Rules

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—In conjunction with the football rules committee, the Central Board of Officials held one of its annual interpretation meetings at the Hotel Manhattan last night. In addition to the majority of the members of the rules committee there were present a number of new men who have at one time or another been conspicuous on the gridiron both as players and as officials.

Dr. J. A. Babbitt of Haverford, was the first speaker, but Walter Camp, the guiding hand of affairs football, acted as chairman and was chief interpreter of the rules as framed at the last year that the rules met with such popular success at the outset of their existence.

Where there were conflicts the rough spots were smoothed out, and although they do not believe all the weaknesses of the rules have been eliminated, still they think that, as a result of their work, the officials will have a clearer and more definite understanding of the rules.

Clear Up One Point.

One point which presented particular difficulty was paragraph O, section 9, of rule 6. In its unabridged form this provided that a safety may be made in the player of the side in possession of the ball makes an uncompleted forward pass behind its goal line, or causes a foul which would give the ball to the opponents behind the offenders' goal. This was supplemented by the addition of the words "or touching back behind the goal line will be immediately known as a safety."

This cleared up one point, and to section 2 of rule 20 was added the provision that it was to apply only to fouls committed by the 20-yard line. This section has to do with the distance penalty for carrying the ball inside the one-yard line and the goal line, and it enforced in part with the section of rule 6 already referred to.

The difficulties encountered in section 2 of rule 20 were eliminated by making the penalty of giving the ball to the opponents on the spot where the foul occurred. In the case of an uncompleted forward pass the substituting of a penalty provided for in the case of illegally touching or recovering the ball, which shall go to the opponents at the spot of the preceding down, instead of where the foul occurred. Paragraphs 8 and C were supplemented by providing that in case that it must not have touched the ground in either case. By eliminating the clause and before the ball had been touched by a player of the kicking side, the danger of the referee or the officials think they will be able to prevent a scramble for the ball on the side lines.

Another point that came on was with reference to the penalty made and often touched upon in section 5 of rule 18. It was decided that the penalty was to be enforced in possession of the ball may assist their hands and arms in a bona fide attempt to get at and tackle the man with the ball. This provision was in the old rules, and although it was not in the rules last year the practice was permitted according to a majority of the officials. The penalty, either side in possession of the ball, same as free ball," under section 5 of rule 18, was retained as before superfluous.

In defining a touchback the committee decreed that a forward pass going over the goal line and striking the ground, the crossbar, or a kicked ball struck by an official player within the confines of the goal is a touchback in addition to the other specified decisions under section 5 of rule 18. It was also decided that the ball should not be declared dead if it struck an official accidentally and play continued.

Escaped All Notice.

One new rule that escaped general observance was that the snapper-back will be under the same rules as the other players with reference to being offside. Section 1 of rule 20 was amended by adding section 4 of rule 20.

Walter Camp explained that the committee was of the opinion that if a man dropped the ball in the act of making a forward pass and did not roll forward, it would be considered a fumble and would be declared such, but if it had any forward movement it would be declared an incomplete pass.

There were a number of other points of minor interest that will be fully described in the revised rules that will be distributed by the committee. In his preliminary remarks, Mr. Babbitt gave the officials some advice with regard to their expense bills and also intimated that the colleges have not done all in their power to make the officials feel they were guests of the institution on the days of the game.

Mr. Camp, before beginning his task of explanation, said that it was largely because of the splendid way in which the officials handled the games last year that the rules met with such popular success at the outset of their existence.

Detroit Tigers Cop Final Game of Series from Red Sox

The Detroit Tigers have come and gone. No more will they be seen at the Huntington avenue grounds, but this season at any rate. They managed to take yesterday's game from the Red Sox, and thus go away with an even break for the final series. Eddie Cicotte, the Detroit merchant, was on the rubber for the Sox, and he gave way in the eighth to Kitling. The final score was 8 to 3 in favor of the Tigers.

Philadelphia copped another game from the St. Louis Browns, and they turned the trick in eleven innings. Jack Coombs was on the rubber for the champions and Hamilton was opposed to him. The Athletics by winning yesterday's game, have won twenty out of the twenty-two games played between the two teams this season.

Cleveland lost another game to the Highlanders. The Highlanders copped the game after battling ten innings, by the score of 4 to 3. Kaiser, who worked for the Naps, was wild, giving eight passes, two of which resulted in runs.

The Chicago White Sox and the Senators finished up their series for the season with a double-header. Chahlin, Scott and Walker opened both games, giving the Senators a double shut of whitewash. Chahlin also pitched the second game for the Senators, allowed but two hits. The Chicago lads went through both games without a fielding misplay.

RED SOX WILL TACKLE BROWNS

Boston's Red Sox will tie an home this afternoon to the down-trodden Browns of St. Louis in the first battle of the Missourians' final series here. The game will be called at 3 o'clock. If the Red Sox want to climb into first division the chance should not be overlooked to do it at St. Louis' expense, so it is probable that Donovan will strive to make a clean-up of the Browns.

Yesterday's defeat by Detroit was a sad blow for the Sox, who hoped to make a majority of the scheduled games with the Tigers and crowd a little more toward top-notch.

St. Louis is said to be putting up a fiercer, stronger game than the Browns ever noted for earlier in the season and a tough battle is expected from them. There is no hope for the Browns to get out of the last cellar this season, but they seem to be playing every day as though the pennant depended upon their winning, and have been going hard when they were forced to lose.

It was expected that Manager Donovan would send Casey Hageman, the Denver recruit, in to pitch the game this afternoon. Hageman has had little chance to show what he has so far, and as the season is waning it was thought he might be given an opportunity to exhibit his stuff in St. Louis.

The Browns will send a southpaw to the slab, in all probability, Lefty George. At least it is George's turn to work.

SPORT GOSSIP

By HARRY J. CASEY.

Joe McCarthy, manager of Eddie Murphy, the South Boston lightweight, who fought Chilcoat, the Australian, here, is in the best of shape. Joe states that Eddie has been putting considerable real work and is ready to meet any man in the country at 133 pounds. Get that 133 pounds? Joe claims that Eddie will go 133 pounds ringside for any man in the class. Wonder what part of his big Murphy kid since leaving Boston?

Paddy Callahan, the South Boston scrapper, is after the scalp of Kid Nell. Paddy states that he would like to meet him at 122 pounds, 3 o'clock in the afternoon or ringside, for fun or winner take all. Paddy says he will see this Kid Nell would like to meet me. Well, you can state that Callahan will join him as soon as he is ready and some club will sign us up. It looks as though it was up to Nell to make good.

The offer Bat Nelson made through the columns of the AMERICAN to send the bantamweight championship has started a flurry of trouble. First Eddie Kevin, manager of Jimmy Walsh, came across with a letter, giving his version of the affair, claiming the title for Walsh. Albert Delmont was the next to get in line. Delmont, while he does not claim the title, says Walsh has no claim on the championship and never did. Al Walsh is in line for a fight to meet any boy in the world whom the public thinks is eligible to battle with Nelson left. Johnny Coulon, in a letter to the Sporting Editor of the AMERICAN, says he will come to Boston and take part in the bantamweight championship. Johnny, it take place, late it November. Looks as though Delmont was the only one in line to see some mighty good bouts between bantams.

Young Donahue, the pride of Roxbury, is determined to get back in the game. Donahue will stack up against Tommy Furey next Monday evening at New Bedford, and if successful, the boy from Roxbury will like for the coast where he will meet Frankie Burns, the youngster who has just been matched to meet Matty Baldwin. Donahue has been training for the bout with Furey for the past week, and is now in the best of condition. His friends look to see the Roxbury boy pull off a victory.

Andy Morris, the East Boston heavyweight, is the latest boxer to be signed up by Hugh McIntosh, the Australian promoter. Morris will leave this country for the Antipodes, along with Jimmy Clabby, on October 1.

The Tigers have come and gone. We are sorry to see them go, for there is bound to be some real baseball seen at the Huntington avenue grounds when Jennings and his scrappy bunch are the attraction.

Horace Fogel, president of the Philadelphia National League team, has issued a challenge to the New York Highlanders for a series of games. If the Highlanders accept, the fans of New York and Philadelphia are going to get about all the Fall baseball that they can stand, for it looks as though the world series would be played in these two towns. With the world series on and a set of interesting games between the Yankees and the Highlanders, Gotham and Shawtown will be busy places.

Hugh Bradley, the former Worcester boy, who injured his knee on the Spring trip of the Red Sox, and who has been out of the game all season, will cover first for the Sox today.

Looks as though the Rustlers had picked up a real first baseman in young Kirk. The young fellow has displaced Bell Houser and Gowdy. Houser was drafted from Indianapolis and came with a great record. Kirk was never heard of until he joined the Rustlers. The first game he played he was shoved in at second base, but did not show up any too good and Tenney switched him over to first, and it looks as though he would stay there.

There are several letters at this office for Bat Nelson.

Notes Gathered Between Innings

Owen Bush got away with seven stolen bases during the Tigers' visit here. The fast little shortstop did some clever base running and, as usual, his fielding seemed to be miraculous.

"Wild Bill" Donovan was "in soft" yesterday and didn't work his hardest. Taking it easy is the best thing Donovan does, and if his team is going to finish behind he does not try to blank the other fellows.

The fourth round yesterday was a nightmare for supporters of the Sox. It seemed for a while that the Tigers would score all the runs they needed to win, but Donovan was called out on strikes finally, though he wasn't looking for the third, and registered a sulking protest when O'Loughlin called it on him.

Cobb kicked on his third strike in the first inning. He claimed he had not swung on the ball, his motion being merely to avoid being hit.

Tonemon threw low twice in the game yesterday, and each time ate his peg helped a Tiger run. His double, however, was timely and scored two, so things are even as far as that goes.

Tonneman's two-bagger might have rolled much further had the turf been dry. As it was the fleet Cobb was upon the ball ere it had gone a great distance.

The showing of the Red Sox against the Tigers this season has been unusually good. The Sox managed to rop ten of the twenty-two games played between the two teams. The Sox scored a total of 100 runs against 111 for the Tigers.

GREEN STAR OF AMATEUR BOUTS

The North Cambridge Athletic Club held its first monthly bouts last night in the new gymnasium on Cedar street, North Cambridge, and the honors were fully furnished with plenty of good boxing.

In the 105-lb. class the finals brought together Lewis Ridge of Boston and Pat Greene of Cambridge. Greene is a newcomer in the amateur ranks, fighting his first battle in the semi-final. Greene showed to the front in all three rounds of the semi-final against Leary of Cambridge and in the final bout he used Ridge continually with his left, occasionally sending his right to the wind. His aggressiveness won the decision.

Alec Arsenau of Boston, fought well in the feather, but defeated to Sullivan of Cambridge in the semi-finals. Sullivan brought together Sullivan and Malone of Cambridge. Malone forced the going from the gong and had Sullivan in a bad way until Sullivan injured his wrist, forcing him to retire.

TECH TRACK LEADER QUITS THE TEAM

Harold G. Watkins, 1912, Tech's crack cross-country runner and captain of this year's track team, will not return to school, having accepted a position in the engineering department of the Boston & Maine Railroad.

Watkins will be a hard man to replace, as he has been Tech's mainstay in cross-country running since the advent in track work in April, 1910. With few exceptions he has been either first or second in every race in which he has participated. He was the Institute's cross-country captain and also president of the Hare and Hounds Society. UMPIRE SHERIDAN IS GIVEN GOLD MEDAL

CHICAGO, Sept. 23.—Jack Sheridan, dean of the American League umpiring staff, was presented yesterday with a gold medal by President Johnson to be relieved permanently from further duties as an umpire. The presentation proceeded to Sheridan's wishes and presented him with the medal at noon, at the close of the morning game. The retired umpire expects to leave for California to-morrow to spend the winter.

Mr. Johnson said that while Sheridan had wished to umpire any more, he would return from the coast next season and remain in the American League in an executive or managerial capacity. President Johnson declined to discuss any probable opening which Sheridan might fill.

Rustlers With Cy Young in the Box Defeat Pirates

The Rustlers with Cy Young in the box sent the Pittsburg Pirates down to defeat yesterday in one of the best games seen at Forbes Field this season. Young was in fine form and the Pirates could do nothing with the veteran's delivery in the pinches. He held Pittsburg to nine hits and prevented them from scoring in an inning after the first. Babe Adams worked for the Pirates and he too had a good game by the score of 1 to 0.

The Giants took another fall out of the St. Louis Cardinals, but it took them ten innings to turn the trick. The final score was 4 to 3. Ames started to work for the Giants but he gave way in favor of Marquard in the first of the ninth. Cincinnati won the final game of the series from Brooklyn by the score of 5 to 3. Boyd worked for the Reds, and until the ninth inning he held the Dodgers safely. In this inning, however, the Dodgers managed to push two runs across the plate.

Bill Burns, who pitched a one-hit game this week against the Cubs, went up yesterday and what he (the Cubs did to him was a shame. The final score was 8 to 3, with the Cubs on the long end and the Phillies on the other. Burns was founded up for fourteen hits, every man on the Chicago team scoring. Tinker succeeded in hitting Burns' offerings.

Helen Shrinks from Mr. Summers' Marked Attention and Admiration

"NOW don't be foolish," she cut in if they were going to," urged Warren. "Wilson and I want to plan out our match of billiards."

Helen stood indecisive. "Oh, but we know I don't like to go without you."

"That's absurd. You've been in all day—the girls' do you good."

"Come on!" cried the Stevens's, who were already out in the car. "Mr. Summers will take care of you if your husband don't come."

Helen hurried down the path to the waiting car.

"I believe you're so sick back here with me," said Mr. Summers, as he sprang out to help her in. "Hadn't I better get you a heavier wrap? Will that chill me be along?"

"Oh, yes, quite enough," as she settled herself back in the wide leather seat.

He Admired Her

Mr. Summers was a cousin of the Stevens' and had been at the hotel for some time. Helen knew that he admired her. Her woman's intuition told her that. He had waited on her party for a number of rides and outings and had been particularly attentive to her.

Often Warren, with his usual indifference, had left her to look after herself, it was Mr. Summers who had hurried to help her in and out of the car, and in many ways had been solicitous about her comfort.

Helen had shrunk from these little attentions because they seemed only to emphasize Warren's neglect. That anyone else should have to look after her when her husband was present seemed but a direct reflection on him.

And now as she sped through the night over the smoothly oiled roads with Mr. Summers beside her in the secussion of the deep back seat, Helen was conscious that by his very silence he was in some way creating between them a curious sense of intimacy.

There is nothing more subtle, nothing that can be made more pregnant with meaning, than a conscious silence. Now and then a sudden jar of the machine swayed her toward him and she was conscious of his arm against hers—and conscious of his consciousness of it.

She tried to think of something to say—something simple and natural, anything to break the silence that grew more and more insistent.

"All the roads around here are so well kept," she murmured at length. "I wonder how often they oil them."

But the remark was so banal and its purpose so obvious that it only increased her discomfort. And it was not answered.

"Every few days I suppose," and then offered no further comment, the silence was more pronounced than ever.

Helen was intensely glad when, a little farther on, they stopped at a roadhouse. She sprang out quickly without giving Mr. Summers a chance to help her.

Helen Is Uneasy.

Helen would rather have gone inside, where the bright lights would have helped to dispel this atmosphere of subtle romance that Mr. Summers was deliberately trying to throw about her.

"Walt, Stevens, in delay this," and Mr. Summers peremptorily beckoned the waiter and gave the order. "Now you are sure you won't have a sandwich or a salad?" he added, leaning toward Helen, who had ordered only a claret lemonade.

She shook her head. "No, that is all I care for."

"Oh, I forgot your footstool!" as the waiter disappeared. "I'm afraid I'm not taking such good care of you after all."

"Oh, I don't need a footstool for the few moments we'll be here," answered Helen, keenly conscious of his intimate tone and yet not knowing how to resent it.

They had sat dined together several times, and when he had found she always wanted a footstool and that Warren had usually left it for her to rest for, he had been quick to preserve one opportunity dipping the waiter for bring it. Each time Helen had secretly resented that anyone should need to look after her while her husband was present, but Warren had not seemed to notice.

The Stevens were also absorbed in the discussion of the new apartments they were having this fall. And Helen seemed so much alone with Mr. Summers as she had been on the back seat of the car.

She grew more and more angry with herself for her unreasonableness. She seemed unable to throw off. In some subtle way he was making her keenly conscious of his every movement and of every inflection of his voice.

Oh, why has not Warren come with them? Why has he been at the office for some time. Helen knew that he admired her. Her woman's intuition told her that. He had urged on their party for a number of rides and outings and had been particularly attentive to her.

A Thrilling Story of Wireless and War

TO-DAY'S INSTALMENT
By ARTHUR STRINGER

PART TWO—(Continued)

BUT the line she looked out on was not the same line that McKinnon and Lowen. It had shifted and changed in an inexplicable side movement. It had crumpled and twisted up on itself, like leaves caught and tossed in a wind eddy.

Then a cry burst from her throat, a cry of sheer joy, and she caught at McKinnon's arm.

"Look!" she said, with a sob.

For swinging about the turn, were two fifteen. Mounted on these guns stood cheering and shouting, shirtsleeved men, stabbing the air with unheeded rifles and dances as the spinning chassiers were discharged and the puffing locomotive pushed them slowly onward along the narrow track.

The Bluejackets

They seemed little more than boys those quick-moving and bright-eyed fellows. They were shouting with the foolish joy and pride of youth at the thought of the new baptism of fire. They seemed like an exercising of madmen to McKinnon.

He wondered what they meant, where they came from. But he could not give them much thought. He had other things to think of—for a wounded Lecomtean, a little brown-faced dragon with a bugle and rifled magazine-rifle, was crawling inwards him on a broken plugh, taking pot-shots as he came. And McKinnon knew as he had to hold that man off, and it worried him to think that he had only a revolver to do it with.

But he fired and reloaded and fired, leading out over his wall-top and hurling half-definitions imprecations into the smoking air. He fought on, to the last, like a man in a dream. All the world to him had become a chaotic pit of contending spirits who clamoured for his blood.

Then he was stirred and disturbed by the sudden scream of the girl at his side. Her voice seemed to come from a great distance. It smote on his ear thinly, as though heard through a wall.

"You're wounded!" she cried, foolishly, hysterically. He dazed it, indifferently and wondered why he was no longer standing beside his cartridge boxes.

He saw her white and tear-streaked face bent over his arm and heard her repeated cry of alarm as she tore away a part of his ragged shirtsleeve. He could see her fingers, when she lifted them, they were wet, and dark-red in color.

Then he knew that she was tearing some part of her dress, that she was binding and twisting a strip of linen about his arm, somewhere below the left shoulder.

He twisted and tightened it crudely; he was too tired to argue with her about it. He felt it would be best to humour it. He had had to endure so much for his pride.

And it was rather pleasant, he told himself, having her fussing about him in that way. But he wished she wouldn't cry so. He wished she wouldn't cry so, and that he could explain to her how much he wanted to go to sleep.

Then he was roused by more shouts and cries and by a voice quite close to his which said, in wonder: "Good God, he's a white man!" Then came more shouts, and a sudden order for someone to stand back.

Heard Her Weeping

McKinnon opened his eyes, wearily, as saw a yellow-faced stranger with a pointed beard. He wore a uniform like an officer's, and carried a sword from a pistol sash, a foolish and womanish-looking sash.

Then came other men and other officers and a thin and faraway babbling of voices till the yellow sand where the car is changed into a lake of swarming, gesticulating human beings, into a sea of lithe brown-faced jumping jacks who shouted and cheered and flung foolish little red-sashed arms raps up in the air, gibbering and arguing and calling, all the while, in some outlandish and incomprehensible tongue.

Married Women as Wage Earners

By DOROTHY DIX

A WORKING girl writes me an exceedingly wrathy letter in which she inveighs against married women who are wage earners, and declares that they take the bread out of the working girl's mouth. She also accuses the woman who has both a husband and a job of being a pig, who wants more than her share of the good things of life.

Softly, little sister. The woman who works outside of her home after she is married is oftener to be pitied than criticised, for in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred it means that her husband is incapable of supporting her, and that to the burden of wifehood and often motherhood, she has to add that of making a living. Sometimes the husband is the victim of unfortunate circumstances. He loses his health, or is thrown out of work. And sometimes he is just plain no account and lazy.

A Pathetic Figure

In either case the woman who must go out and earn the food for her family and then come home and cook it is a pathetic figure as you can find. It is hard enough for a young girl to have to stand behind a counter, or pound a typewriter all day, but how infinitely worse for the woman who has been up half of the night nursing a sick husband, or listening for the footsteps of a drunken one, and perhaps cowering away from his blows, or who has left a little sick child at home and whose heart stands still with fear every time a strange footstep comes near, lest it be some one bringing her the bad news she dreads to hear.

The home is the goal of practically every woman's desire. Not many married women leave it willingly to go out into the world to work, and when one does become a bread winner you will find that she has almost invariably been driven to it by stern necessity.

Of course, my correspondent's view that the woman who is married, and who has a husband to support her, should not compete with unmarried women in the labor market, is a natural, if a prejudiced one. As a matter of fact, however, it has no standing in justice. Every one of us has a right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness in our own way, and if the married woman feels that she can best help herself by working outside of the home instead of in it, or that she prefers typewriting to cooking, she has a perfect right to do as she pleases in the matter. Getting married didn't change her talents and should not curtail her privilege of using them.

The theory of society is that every man is able to earn a comfortable living for himself and his family. This should be true, but under present economic conditions it is always the case. Nevertheless there are plenty of men who do the very best they can and yet can never keep the wolf away from the door. Should any of the wife of such a man have a right to shoulder her gun and help make war on the common enemy, poverty?

There are other men, good and true and lovable, who are born without any business ability, just as most of us are born without a tenor voice. Many of these men marry women who have the talent for getting on that the husbands lack. And these wives sit down and fold their hands and let their families starve because, if they go out so work, they will compete with unmarried women?

Would Live Apart

Again, there are many young couples who are in love and who could marry comfortably on the combined earnings of both, but who must forever remain apart if the wife gives up her job on her wedding day.

The wife can help her husband more by earning money than she can by cooking his dinner and washing his shirts, is there any reason why she shouldn't do it? Married Life the Second Year

By MABEL HERBERT URNER

Helen Shrinks from Mr. Summers' Marked Attention and Admiration

"NOW don't be foolish," she cut in if they were going to," urged Warren. "Wilson and I want to plan out our match of billiards."

Helen stood indecisive. "Oh, but we know I don't like to go without you."

"That's absurd. You've been in all day—the girls' do you good."

"Come on!" cried the Stevens's, who were already out in the car. "Mr. Summers will take care of you if your husband don't come."

Helen hurried down the path to the waiting car.

"I believe you're so sick back here with me," said Mr. Summers, as he sprang out to help her in. "Hadn't I better get you a heavier wrap? Will that chill me be along?"

"Oh, yes, quite enough," as she settled herself back in the wide leather seat.

He Admired Her

Mr. Summers was a cousin of the Stevens' and had been at the hotel for some time. Helen knew that he admired her. Her woman's intuition told her that. He had urged on their party for a number of rides and outings and had been particularly attentive to her.

Often Warren, with his usual indifference, had left her to look after herself. it was Mr. Summers who had hurried to help her in and out of the car, and in many ways had been solicitous about her comfort.

Helen had shrunk from these little attentions because they seemed only to emphasize Warren's neglect. That anyone else should have to look after her when her husband was present seemed but a direct reflection on him.

And now as she sped through the night over the smoothly oiled roads with Mr. Summers beside her in the secussion of the deep back seat, Helen was conscious that by his very silence he was in some way creating between them a curious sense of intimacy.

There is nothing more subtle, nothing that can be made more pregnant with meaning, than a conscious silence. Now and then a sudden jar of the machine swayed her toward him and she was conscious of his arm against hers—and conscious of his consciousness of it.

She tried to think of something to say—something simple and natural, anything to break the silence that grew more and more insistent.

"All the roads around here are so well kept," she murmured at length. "I wonder how often they oil them."

But the remark was so banal and its purpose so obvious that it only increased her discomfort. And it was not answered.

"Every few days I suppose," and then offered no further comment, the silence was more pronounced than ever.

Helen was intensely glad when, a little farther on, they stopped at a roadhouse. She sprang out quickly without giving Mr. Summers a chance to help her.

Helen Is Uneasy.

Helen would rather have gone inside, where the bright lights would have helped to dispel this atmosphere of subtle romance that Mr. Summers was deliberately trying to throw about her.

"Walt, Stevens, in delay this," and Mr. Summers peremptorily beckoned the waiter and gave the order. "Now you are sure you won't have a sandwich or a salad?" he added, leaning toward Helen, who had ordered only a claret lemonade.

She shook her head. "No, that is all I care for."

"Oh, I forgot your footstool!" as the waiter disappeared. "I'm afraid I'm not

It Begins to Rain

It had been rather a cloudy, uncertain night when they started. And now to Helen's dismay it began to sprinkle.

"Want the curtains up back there?" asked Mr. Stevens.

"Oh no—no, it's only a few drops, and I love to feel it against my face," answered Helen quickly, feeling that to be shut in back there by the rain curtains would only add to the intimacy of it all.

But I can't have you get wet," and taking cold, protested Mr. Summers.

Helen felt her face dash at the peremptory words. "I can't have you, but there was nothing she could say.

The few heavy drops had changed to a fine misty rain.

"Now I must insist on having the curtains up," as he leaned over and felt the shoulders of her wrap, which were now quite damp.

Helen could only submit. Mr. Stevens stopped the car and came back to get the curtains which were under their seat. When the curtains were fastened in place, it left them in complete darkness there in that deep back seat. Helen felt as though she was shut in with him from all the world.

As they sped back to the hotel through the now heavier rain Helen unconsciously felt the shoulders of her wrap, and the fastening of the curtain beside her, for she had shrank over to her extreme end of the seat.

"Isn't the rain coming in through the opening there? Come over this way more. I'm sure you're getting wet?"

A sudden flash of lightning and a dazzling glare as the lightning swept before them. Helen gave a little cry. Instantly Mr. Summers's hand covered hers.

"You're not frightened are you?" he asked, quickly withdrawing her hand. "It was absurd for me to suggest it. It was quite unnatural," he answered gently, with a caressing note in his voice which made her shrink from him.

At last they drew up before the hotel. Hardly waiting to say good night Helen flew up the path, across the veranda and to her room.

Warren was in bed, his arms flung up over his head. And without undressing she sank into a chair beside him. With a sigh of relief and happiness very softly, without wakening him, she rested her head on his pillow.

The unwanted and distasteful attentions of another man always makes a woman turn almingly to the man she loves.

To Helen the evening had been hateful. And now that she was with Warren again, she was filled with a delicious sense of peace, of security, of being where she belonged.

Married Women as Wage Earners

By DOROTHY DIX

A WORKING girl writes me an exceedingly wrathy letter in which she inveighs against married women who are wage earners, and declares that they take the bread out of the working girl's mouth. She also accuses the woman who has both a husband and a job of being a pig, who wants more than her share of the good things of life.

Softly, little sister. The woman who works outside of her home after she is married is oftener to be pitied than criticised, for in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred it means that her husband is incapable of supporting her, and that to the burden of wifehood and often motherhood, she has to add that of making a living. Sometimes the husband is the victim of unfortunate circumstances. He loses his health, or is thrown out of work. And sometimes he is just plain no account and lazy.

A Pathetic Figure

In either case the woman who must go out and earn the food for her family and then come home and cook it is a pathetic figure as you can find. It is hard enough for a young girl to have to stand behind a counter, or pound a typewriter all day, but how infinitely worse for the woman who has been up half of the night nursing a sick husband, or listening for the footsteps of a drunken one, and perhaps cowering away from his blows, or who has left a little sick child at home and whose heart stands still with fear every time a strange footstep comes near, lest it be some one bringing her the bad news she dreads to hear.

The home is the goal of practically every woman's desire. Not many married women leave it willingly to go out into the world to work, and when one does become a bread winner you will find that she has almost invariably been driven to it by stern necessity.

Of course, my correspondent's view that the woman who is married, and who has a husband to support her, should not compete with unmarried women in the labor market, is a natural, if a prejudiced one. As a matter of fact, however, it has no standing in justice. Every one of us has a right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness in our own way, and if the married woman feels that she can best help herself by working outside of the home instead of in it, or that she prefers typewriting to cooking, she has a perfect right to do as she pleases in the matter. Getting married didn't change her talents and should not curtail her privilege of using them.

The theory of society is that every man is able to earn a comfortable living for himself and his family. This should be true, but under present economic conditions it is always the case. Nevertheless there are plenty of men who do the very best they can and yet can never keep the wolf away from the door. Should any of the wife of such a man have a right to shoulder her gun and help make war on the common enemy, poverty?

There are other men, good and true and lovable, who are born without any business ability, just as most of us are born without a tenor voice. Many of these men marry women who have the talent for getting on that the husbands lack. And these wives sit down and fold their hands and let their families starve because, if they go out so work, they will compete with unmarried women?

Would Live Apart

Again, there are many young couples who are in love and who could marry comfortably on the combined earnings of both, but who must forever remain apart if the wife gives up her job on her wedding day.

The wife can help her husband more by earning money than she can by cooking his dinner and washing his shirts, is there any reason why she shouldn't do it? There are many cases in which a man's future prosperity could be assured by his wife holding quite well paid job and bringing in a little necessary money for a year or two after marriage.

Nor does it seem fair to ask the woman who has spent thousands of dollars and years of time fitting herself to follow some profession or calling, to give it up and become the married and some single woman would like to have her place.

Note the foul plot of the villain Desmond. He has engaged a Hindoo magician to hypnotize Rosamond, so that she will consent to marry him. Only a thorough scoundrel could have conceived such a plot, and if the Hindoo were not another rascal, he would not aid in such a plan.

The unfortunate Claude, from the top of a high bluff, sees all that is going on. He knows the power of these Hindoo magicians, and knows that the innocent Rosamond will be helpless in the hands of Desmond and his Indian assistant villain. But what can he do? There is no way to get across.

A lucky accident! Rosamond's handbag has been dropped, and in it Claude finds a little mirror. Rosamond is not above looking in the glass to see if her nose is red on occasions. Although a vain thing, but you may remember how you worked the same ploy when you were a mischievous youngster; and now circumstances have compelled her to wear the same hat so long, she is careful of her appearance.

The wicked hypnotist is baffled! Claude has flashed the sun in his eyes with the little mirror, and the rascally Hindoo is thereby rendered incapable of performing any magic. A simple thing, but you may, his greater strength.

The hypnotic wedding is off. The blinded Hindoo stumbles along as Claude dashes to the aid of his sweetheart, who is still in the clutches of the villain. Desmond, naturally, runs away as fast as he can, for he dare not stay to try conclusions with Claude. Too often has Claude shown his prowess.

"I'm the boss!" cries Desperate Desmond, "and the rajah is my pal," as he dashes over the drawbridge of an Indian castle. Claude is just too late to make the same bridge. What will happen to Rosamond in the mysterious castle can only be conjectured until the artist shows us in Monday's pictures.

Those Tickets!

YARRINGTON promised his friends to buy the box they wanted for one night at the automobile races. The best thing Yarrington does is to oblige his friends, and all the others had said they had no time to attend to the matter.

The broker he went to said that while boxes were very scarce, he thought by paying a premium he might be able to wrench one by main force from the eager throngs that were bottling for them, provided Yarrington would take it for the two days. When he escaped from the broker Yarrington had parted with $40, but he figured on quickly disposing of the box for Friday, and the $20 that would be left was not much split up among the crowd.

He had his first jolt the next morning when Plentz telephoned that imperative business called him to San Francisco, so his name must be scratched off the list. At noon Kernack called up to say there was a sudden rush of business at the office and it was absolutely impossible for him to get away Saturday, so Yarrington must count him out. At 3 Woodmere called up to say that since some of the party could not go he thought they might as well call off the party.

After Yarrington had confided some bitter things to himself over the treachery of humanity in general he hunted up the broker and asked him to take back the tickets. He had no compunction about this, as there was such a demand for them. The broker smoothly said he had such a quantity of boxes on hand that he really could not think of paying the full price for Yarrington's, but that he would at great personal sacrifice give Yarrington $10 for it.

Trying to Sell.

Thereupon Yarrington sold a few sharp things and departed, resolved to sell the tickets himself since selling was so much more profitable than buying.

He called up Wattles and found he didn't want a box for one day of the automobile races. Wattles jumped at the chance as Yarrington sent over the tickets and a bill for $20. Wattles nearly tore the telephone out by the roots and the boy with the tickets came back looking very much as though he had been shot out of a gun.

It seemed that Wattles thought Yarrington was giving him the box and so the gift offended him hugely.

After that Yarrington heard of a man who wanted to go to ——— and good people liked to send over the tickets. Before he did so Kernack phoned that he would now Yarrington to dispose of the box, as he had some friends to whom he had promised it. After Yarrington had told the other man that he could get have the tickets Kernack called up to say that his friends were broken and he didn't want the box after all.

By this time Yarrington was in an exceedingly tense and nervous state and hated the world vehemently. He was a cynic on the subject of friendship and despaired as regards the fair sex. It was manifestly impossible for him to stand on the street corner and wave the tickets in the faces of the passersby, but he hit on another plan.

Taking the office boy into a corner he thrust the hated tickets into his hands.

"You go out there to the track," he ordered, "and sell these seats for what you can get. Don't you dare come back here with them, because if I ever set eyes on them again I can't answer for the result."

Office Boy Success.

A little later Woodmere telephoned that he wanted the seats for his cousin's family, and when he learned that they were unavailable he said that Yarrington might think that was the right way to treat a friend of long standing as for himself, he had his own opinion of such conduct. He said that Yarrington might have known he would want the tickets if Yarrington had given the matter the least thought.

When the office boy came back that night he looked haggard. He said that by telling the people he was the only support of three widowed mothers, and eight brothers and sisters he had sold the Friday tickets among the throng at the tracks for a paltry dollar apiece. He said he had intended to invest in one for himself, but that in a lucky moment he had handed out the box and sat in it. He regretted to say that it was the very worst one there for position and that after he had found he would have an unrestricted view of one post, a corner of fence and a blank wall, he decided he would not buy a ticket.

"What did you do with the Saturday tickets?" Yarrington asked in a hollow voice.

The office boy burst into tears. "I—I lost 'em," he sobbed.

"Well, that's lucky, anyway," said Yarrington.

Hushed Up---By Meta Simmons

Synopsis of Preceding Instalments

JOHN MARTINDALE volunteers for five years' missionary service in fever-stricken Cambula and thereby sacrifices, temporarily, the fulfilment of his love for Clemency Westgarth. Conrad Tring, his close friend, declares he was intended for a pirate, not a parson, and warns him against the dire possibilities of Cambula. He bids good-by to his sweetheart and goes to meet Mrs. Katherine Saxe, wife of the head of the missionary movement in Cambula, whom he is going to take out to her husband. He arrives in town only to find a letter from Mrs. Saxe postponing their meeting. In a restaurant, while re-reading a letter, he bobs up to meet a woman's eye. She speaks to him and it turns out she is Mrs. Saxe. Accompanying her is a girl he had known as Kitty Lomax, who, before her marriage, was a Gaiety girl and was dying of fever.

Kitty tries to dissuade him from going to Cambula, but he will have none of her arguments. He arrives in West Africa with Kitty, and the latter's husband comes down to the coast to meet her, a day's journey from Cambula itself. The old friendship of Kitty and Martindale has been fully established on the long journey to West Africa.

The three start on the journey inland to Cambula. While camping en route, Martindale awakes to hear a woman's voice calling his name. The cry has come from Saxe's tent. He runs in the first and finds that Saxe is drunk and has stabbed Kitty.

TO-DAY'S INSTALMENT

Copyright, 1910, by United Newspapers Co.

PART ONE—(Continued)

AT the sound of her voice Saxe turned to Martindale with a snarl of fury, and Martindale saw that he held something in his hand—a short, murderous-looking knife, such as the natives used for the cutting up of big carcasses. For a moment not a word was spoken. Saxe stood staring at Martindale with a mad, vindictive look, but he needed no speak no word to apprise the other of his state.

Struggled for Knife

Martindale recognized it at once; John Saxe was mad drunk, as such silent, severe drinkers can suddenly become. The glittering, dilated eyes, the ceaselessly moving lips, that curious rigidity in the poise of the body told Martindale that he had seen a man before in delirium tremens; it was not an uncommon sight in the river-side slums at Runcseed.

"So, you've come, parson," Saxe said at last, with a deliberate distinctness of diction. "I'm glad of that—it will save me trouble."

Martindale made no reply. He fixed his eyes on Saxe steadily and advanced toward him. Physically, Saxe in height and build they stood equal terms, he was no match in weight for Saxe unarmed and sober; in the hands of Saxe armed and mad with drink the lust of killing, he was like a rat in the grip of a terrier. All he could hope for was to divert his attention to himself and so give Kitty a chance to escape.

"Put down that knife," he said authoritatively.

Saxe laughed sinisterly.

"Not yet, parson, not yet," he said, and before Martindale was well aware of his intention he had sprung upon him. He closed with him, struggling for the knife, and cried quietly and insistently to the woman.

He could not see if she obeyed, every nerve, every sense was alert as he struggled against the man with the brute strength and the madman's brain. He was conscious as he struggled of an impression of being thought he strove, not with a man, but with some great beast endowed suddenly with everything human save soul.

"Go, Kitty!" he cried again, for as they swayed to and fro he caught a glimpse of her white dress gleaming in the shadow. Why did she stay there in the danger—he felt an almost savage irritation at her unreasonableness. And Saxe, shaking him to and fro, striving to throw off the grip that clung increasingly to his left wrist crippling it, was conscious of his irritation and cried jeeringly to the woman but died against the wall of the tent, sick and faint, too dazed for the moment to so much as move.

"Go, my jewel. Obey the parson. I'll be ready for you soon."

Swayed to and Fro

His breath came whistling through his closed teeth like the panting breath of a dog.

"I'll do for you, curse you! You thought you'd come between me and my wife, you sneaking parson!" He laughed and cursed. "You're of the breed that creep into houses and take captive lonely women—but I know how to deal with your breed—now! SAFE—by bone and bar. Blood

WALLACE C. CONDIT.
Mass.

The words he cried aloud were hideously and naked sane, but there was a mad, savage fury in his eyes. For the instant he seemed thrown by it a little off his guard, or perhaps the botanical skill acquired in the gymnasiums of innumerable boys' clubs stood Martindale in good stead. Striking out, he managed to catch the man a stinging blow on the jaw, and Saxe reeled back, tripped on something slimy on the tarpaulin and covered the ground and fell, grasping the knife for aid in stant. But only for an instant, for he had recovered his weapon and his feet again almost before Martindale had realized that he had gone down before his blow.

As he regained his feet he sprang on Martindale with a bellow of fury.

They swayed to and fro silently.

The world seemed to be growing dark about Martindale. Kitty was forgotten now; the identity of the man with whom he struggled; an aim blindly seemed to be slipping away from him. He was a life fighting against a life for the mastery, that was all; and death gibbed in and out among the shadows of the tent, gibbering and applauding.

Must Not Relax

Sometimes on the floor, sometimes it almost seemed off their feet; but sling sling always with that one hand of his he must retain hold of Saxe's sinewy wrist; even in death that grip must not be relaxed. Identity or a moment—he had no sense of time.

His strength was failing him now. It could only be a question of seconds before the end came. He became aware of a strange, whistling sound and only dimly realized it to be his own panting, agonized breath. Saxe, with a madman's strength, was bearing him down; the wrist he held seemed to have grown to a monstrous size to turn beneath his hold, gradually relaxing fingers. Soon he must fall into the darkness that was closing about him.

He had a moment's impression of the gleam of Saxe's teeth as the man snarled with vindictive triumph at the consciousness of his own strength. Something white gleamed among the shadows, moved, and disappeared . . . he knew it for the gleam of a woman's face. Kitty was there . . . how tiresome she was, how perverse! He called to her again to go, but only a thin trickle of sound issued from his lips.

The Battle in Darkness

But the sight of the woman pierced through the mists of his weakness and rallied his failing senses. He realized that it was not for his own life that he was fighting, but for hers, and the thought nerved him to a last desperate effort. A futile effort; even as he put out that last desperate summit of his strength, Saxe with a great shout of derision had wrenched himself free, flung him from him.

THE GREATEST OF MODERN ESSAYISTS, EXCEPTIONALLY WRITES FOR THE AMERICAN

You can have a dinner just like the one the Kaiser said was the best he ever ate if you follow the recipes given by this distinguished chef in

SUNDAY'S AMERICAN.

Better Follow Anty Drudge's Advice.

Mrs. Newbride—"Yes, but this is the way mother washed. She always said to boil the clothes good and long."

Anty Drudge—"Yes, and your mother wore hoopskirts, and a poke bonnet, and did her sewing by hand, when she was young. But I don't see you doing those things. Take my advice and use Fels-Naptha soap in cold or lukewarm water. Those pretty white hands will last longer and so will your health."

Every woman inherits certain ways of doing housework from her mother as the mother did from her grandmother. One of these ideas from ancient times concerns the washing of clothes. "Boil 'em, Boil 'em good," is the old tradition. Until the invention of Fels-Naptha soap that was the only way to wash. Now, isn't it foolish to keep on boiling clothes, and rubbing them hard, when a way to wash better in cold or lukewarm water with no hard rubbing has been found?

Clothes last longer with no boiling to weaken their fibre. Every progressive woman is glad to get rid of the hot fire, steam and suds, as well as the back-breaking work of hard rubbing.

But there's a right way and a wrong way to use Fels-Naptha. Start right. Follow the directions on the wrapper and you'll have a better, easier, cleaner way of washing. For other reasons which are explained on the red and green wrapper, Fels-Naptha is just as superior for all kitchen purposes as it is for washing.

Pour in your cream and stir.
Is your cup of coffee a muddy brown? Something wrong.
Is it a watery yellow? Failure.
The color of the perfect cup of coffee is rich golden. It can't be mistaken. If you are not familiar with it, try

WIFE SURE OF VANIMAN'S TRIP

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Sept. 23.—"I know that my husband, Evan Vaniman, I wouldn't have him miss going across the ocean in the dirigible Akron for anything in the world."

That's the way Mrs. Melvin Vaniman, wife of the man who will attempt to fly across the Atlantic ocean next week in a dirigible, put the matter when asked about it. She says her husband will meet with any accident in his daring venture that she would have to be more glad to see a little automobile ride.

Besides her husband, Mrs. Vaniman has a son, Evan, who is 14 years old, and a daughter, Miss Dorothy Vaniman, 12 years old. Mrs. Vaniman is a skilled mechanician and is considered by Lieutenant Commander Ellsberg, of the navy, as a valuable member of the party.

Mrs. Vaniman says a cottage here near the big hangar and Mrs. Vaniman will be part of her time watching the work on the big dirigible. The mechanicians declare she knows more about airships than any woman.

"I think the Akron will be the greatest dirigible ever constructed in the world," she said. "I think it will be the first wonderful of Mr. Vaniman succeeds in crossing the ocean, and I am sure he will. I am confident, however, and others should be anything I would hesitate to do. I have implicit faith in my husband."

Mrs. Vaniman is staying at Atlantic City until the start is made from the Atlantic coast, when she will go to New York to meet her husband on his arrival from the ocean.

The Shakers That Killed "Sister" Sadie Marchant

And the Discussion "Is Murder Sometimes Permissible?" It Is Not.

Copyright, 1911, by American Journal Examiner

In a colony of Shakers, earnest, ignorant, religious enthusiasts, living in a remote corner of Florida, a woman—"Sister" Sadie Marchant—was suffering with consumption.

The sick woman complained of her torment and is said to have expressed a wish that she might be set free from pain.

The case was declared by the other Shakers to be incurable, but of course they knew nothing about that.

The important fact is that two of the Shakers, "Brother" Gillette and "Sister" Elizabeth Sears, decided that they would take the responsibility of inflicting death in a good cause.

They chloroformed the sick woman and killed her. And now they and others in their colony declare that it was the right thing to do and that they would do it again.

This killing of the woman by well-meaning, ignorant, religious fanatics has started a discussion, very old, as to the right of human beings to inflict death on one that suffers and cannot recover.

It is hardly necessary to say that no such right can ever be recognized. To begin with, every human being has it within his power to inflict death upon himself if suffering becomes unbearable. To the credit of human nature, and to the still greater credit of the instinct of self-preservation, it must be said that human beings rarely kill themselves because of illness of the body. It is illness of the mind that ends in suicide most often.

It is also a fact that modern science is able, in almost all cases, to relieve extreme pain. And cases are very few in which intelligent doctors are not able by the use of drugs to deaden sensation and the acuteness of suffering.

That it would be criminal and dangerous to establish by law any right to kill in order to relieve from disease is made apparent by the case of these ignorant Shakers that killed the sick woman.

They felt that they were doing the right thing, and so they killed her without right under the law.

How numerous would be the killings, especially among religious fanatics, if there were any faintest semblance of legal warrant for inflicting death without legal process!

At first, perhaps, death would be inflicted only in cases of supposedly hopeless illness and great suffering.

Before long, you would have bands of religious fanatics, convinced that it would be a good idea to chloroform innocent children, in order to prevent them from growing up into sinners and later on going down into hell.

Men and women engaged in discussing the advisability of making murder a matter of individual decision do not know, apparently, that the human race has been working for about two thousand centuries to get away from the idea that one might kill another when that course seemed advisable.

And for centuries—ten and hundreds of them—whenever a chief or a rich man built a house, one or dozens of living human victims were buried under the cornerstone—to bring luck and to placate the divine furies—that seemed an excellent religious thing to do.

And for other centuries, more recent and so-called civilized even, it was customary for men who believed in one religion to catch those who believed in another religion and burn them alive, after tearing them on the rack—that seemed a very good idea, from a religious point of view, as it kept them from persisting in their damnable errors and sinking deeper and deeper into sin.

Only very recently has the human race discovered that the best thing to do is to let a man or a woman go on living, in spite of conflicting religious beliefs.

The fact that some ignorant, half-crazed Shakers, living in unnatural isolation, struggling vainly to live up to unnatural and impossible standards, should include the murder of a poor, feeble woman in their acts, is not sufficient basis for serious discussion of the advisability of murdering the sick.

It could not be done in any case except with the consent and desire of the sick person, and that would be legalized suicide.

Such a discussion tends to degrade the sacredness of human life, the rights of the individual.

Such a discussion ignores the fact that some of the noblest work done by human beings has been done under intense suffering. It ignores also the splendid effect that suffering has upon human nature, not only developing loftiness of spirit in the individual, but setting a noble example before the young, and instilling sympathy and kindness.

Rather than discuss the desirability of killing the sick and suffering, the desirability of making murder legal under certain conditions, it would be well to discuss and to bring about the abolition of murder absolutely—including the shameful, demoralizing legal murders committed by the State and called capital punishment.

Life is a marvellous and sacred thing, a flame invisible that transcends reason eludes all observation and explanation.

It is harmful and mischievous to discuss diminution of the safeguards that surround it.

LETTERS FROM AMERICAN READERS

A PROTEST BY MR. WALSH

Editor AMERICAN:

Your editorial of this date is a mark of insolence to me. I am one of those ranking high who viewed the fact that I have no reason to withdraw from the contest before the N. Y., N. H. & H. railroad, and I still insist that the public interests should be carefully conserved when any proposition coming from that or any other railroad or public service corporation is presented for the consideration of legislators.

I am not so thick-headed as to hold that every proposition coming from or espoused by railroad or public service corporations is necessarily vicious because of its origin.

The men who are responsible for causing your editorial to be published will gain nothing by their bald attempt to defeat me when all other means to defeat me by them have failed.

Will you kindly give this letter an equal publicity with the false statements you make against me? Very truly yours,

JOHN H. WALSH.

Not Even the Sweat Shops of Europe or the Mines of Russia Can Rival This Boston Story. It Will Be Published in the Sunday American

Can the people of Boston credit the horrifying fact that right at their very doors, within a day, has been discovered a condition of labor atrocity the unveiling of which will shock the entire community?

The details of the conditions involved are revolting enough to be incredible. Yet they are true, and all Massachusetts, all New England, every decent man and woman with a Christian heart, no matter where they live throughout this entire country, will hang their heads for shame that such things could be in this progressive, Christian Commonwealth.

Within twenty-four hours members of the staff of this newspaper have witnessed labor conditions in a certain foundry in Greater Boston which are so inhuman, so indecent, and in every way so abhorrent to all our ideas of civilized existence as to call for the holding of a mass meeting of indignant citizenship under the eaves of the foundry where such conditions were seen.

The public will be told the facts to-morrow by the Sunday AMERICAN.

And the day after, the Governor of this Commonwealth will be asked to say what he thinks of the State officials who have permitted such conditions to exist, and what steps he intends to take towards their exemplary punishment.

Diary of Abe Henstep

I AM writing this in the basement. I came down here a while ago and locked myself in so I wouldn't disturb my wife. I walked down and did the locking in by proxy. My wife holds all the proxies around here. She also holds the key. She doesn't know that I have a corncob pipe hid under the coal.

The real trouble arose over a temperance argument. I took a little taste of balm of happy land to show the boys that I was not afraid to do so. Then I took another to show myself that I was not afraid to do so. After that I didn't care whether I was afraid or not.

My wife had said something regarding a brother of mine, who is employed as chief dishwasher or something at the penitentiary, and it rankled in my bosom. My bosom had never been in a rankled condition before.

Anyway, I determined to go home at once and lay down a few rules which my wife was to follow out. I have not yet laid down the rules. Show me the man who can lay down a dozen heavy, cautious rules in one evening.

My wife met me at the gate. She said I was trying to induce the gate to leave its work and come in and have dinner with us. But I was not. I was merely begging its pardon for bothering it at that time of the night. My wife then tried to embrace me and her hands slipped, one of them striking my nose and the other, by some means, caught hold of my ear and she couldn't get it away.

Then I came down here. It was not my intention to come home and hurry right down to the basement and write this diary; it can always wait. But my wife made it an object for me to come, so I came.

In a few minutes I shall light my corncob pipe and compose myself to slumber. I have decided to lay the rule-laying business on the table until I am a little stronger than my breath.

Powers That Be

By MILES OVERHOLT

I'M a sort of a grouch, and I can't take a joke,
And I never will laugh when a guy
Springs a warmed-over chestnut with giggle and croak
For I couldn't laugh if I'd try.
But I'm telling you flat there is always a time
When I put all my feelings in souk,
And I laugh loud and long, just in join in the chime,
When the boss tells us any old joke.

At least twice a day some fellows come in
And tell me cheap stories long dead,
And the best I can do is simply to grin
And place chunks of ice on my head.
But I'm telling the truth, and I'll offer the proof,
I've laughed till I thought I would choke,
And I've shattered the windows and lifted the roof
When the boss has sprung any old joke.

'Tis a curious thing how it happens that way,
And I can't seem to figure it out;
I feel just as glum as an oyster all day,
But I holler and yodel and shout
When the boss springs a chestnut with long whiskerettes;
Yes, I laugh like a barkeeping bloke,
And I turn on the joy-valve and copper all bets
When the boss tells us any old joke.

The Rev. Dr. Parkhurst found rotten ties on Mr. Mellen's New Haven Railroad. He tells of his own investigations in this matter, and accuses New Haven officials of neglect. See to-morrow's Sunday AMERICAN.
